Introduction

This history was prepared to provide an interesting and enlightening account of the early Beech Creek area and its development to the present day. In order to give as complete a story as possible census, assessment and legal records were searched, old newspapers were reviewed, and "old timers" were queried. To add to the attractiveness of this publication old pictures, particularly of large groups and interesting sights or objects, were sought. Despite all this effort it is realized that what appears on the following pages does not represent the total history of the area. This book, therefore, leaves a challenge to its readers to find and record some of the missing data.

It is expected that even the most intense and thorough research has resulted in some erroneous data. Errors may have come not only from information gathered by personal interview, but also from data that had been incorrectly printed or recorded previously. Much difficulty was encountered in trying to obtain maiden names of early wives, and, in many cases, especially in the very early days, the given names of many of the women have not been established. On several occasions newspaper publicity revealed that this undertaking was in progress and information, such as may be found in attics, old Bibles, or merely stored in peoples' minds, was being solicited. Unfortunately responses to these appeals were not very gratifying.

To better identify persons, particularly those of previous generations, who are singled out for one reason or another, the names of parents, or spouses, or sometimes descendants, were included, when available, to aid the reader. Such identification was included in only one reference to the same individual, usually the first.

This project was not undertaken for a profit. The cost per copy will be based on actual printing and distribution, with no reimbursement for the large expenses involved in years of research, mostly out of town.

The Authors

Harry A. Lingle was born at Beech Creek to Richard B. Lingle and Mabel H. (Brady) Lingle on April 25, 1912. As a boy growing up he enjoyed the tales of the "old timers" who congregated in the tobacco shops and similar places. He now regrets that he didn't make notes, especially when they recounted early-day happenings. In his youth he joined his friends in such activities as swimming, boating, scouting, camping, baseball, and later, hunting. Meantime he became the best stilt-walker and pole-vaulter in town and one of the better ice skaters. His high stilts required mounting from the front porch roof. Using a sawed-off pike pole for vaulting he could clear the bar around the eleven-foot mark. He recalls jumping from the top of the Beech Creek bridge into the water below, and standing on his head on top of the same bridge.

In 1928 Mr. Lingle completed the courses offered in the local high school, and in 1930 graduated from Lock Haven High School. Four years later he completed training for elementary teaching at Lock Haven State College, where he was a member of the varsity baseball team. Shortly thereafter he began a six-year tenure as grammar school teacher and principal at Orviston in Centre County. During these latter years, and for many years to follow, he played baseball in both the Central and Centre County leagues. While still a college student Mr. Lingle married Vera A. Thompson, a daughter of David H. and Bessie Mae (Leathers) Thompson. At the end of 1969 he closed out a career at the Lock Haven office of the Bureau of Employment Security, where he had served as interviewer, assistant manager and interim manager.

Vera A. (Thompson) Lingle was born in Liberty Township on October 12, 1912. Five years later her family moved to the Bower farm, just east of Mt. Eagle. Incidentally, her husband's great grandmother, Mary (Leathers) Bitner, was born in 1815 at this same farm, in the original living quarters, a log house, that was left standing over the years and used for storage, until the Sayers dam was built. Vera graduated from Howard High School in 1929, took a one-year post graduate course at Bellefonte High School, and completed commercial training at Altoona School of Commerce in 1932. At the time of her marriage she was employed by the State Emergency Relief Board at Philipsburg, having been transferred there from State College. Even as a young girl she was an avid reader, usually carrying a book with her when she was assigned to watching the cows at pasture. She is accused, even to this day, of becoming so involved in her reading that she oc-asionally allowed the cows to wander too far. She offers no denials.

In 1954, when heart surgery was still in the very early stages of development, Vera, wisely, and rather courageously, accepted the suggestion of her doctor and neighbor, Robert E. Drewery, and placed herself in the hands of the pioneering heart surgeon, Charles Philmore Bailey. A hole, described by Dr. Bailey as "the size of a quarter, and a thirty-cent one, at that," between the upper chambers was successfully closed, and she is here today to help write the Beech Creek story. On March 25, 1957 Time Magazine told of the advances that had been made in heart surgery. Dr. Bailey's picture was on the front cover.

Knowing that Harry's great grandmother Bitner, wife of Abraham, was born as Mary Leathers, and that Vera's mother was also a Leathers, the Lingles set out in 1971 to determine if any relationship existed. They soon learned that they were fourth cousins, each having the same great, great, great grandparents, Jacob (Sr.) and Mary (Shirk) Leathers. Finding this type of research very fascinating, the two Lingles, in partnership, so to speak, were soon doing more and more family tracings. In 1975, with a deadline for completion only four months in the future, the Lingles accepted the task of writing, without reimbursement, the history for the Bicentennial book of neighboring Liberty Township. The rapid sale of 700 copies, and the many favorable compliments received, encouraged the Lingles to prepare a story of the Beech Creek area.

Mr. and Mrs. Lingle are the parents of these four children: Zoe Ann (Stine), who teaches in Los Angeles, California, and has four children; Barry, a regional representative for Mobil Oil Corporation, with headquarters in Los Angeles, has twin daughters; Frederick, district attorney of Clinton County, has one son; and David, a teacher in the Williamsport schools has three children.

Mr. Lingle's ancestors include Snyders, Kuneses, Berryhills, Bitners, Nestlerodes, and Housers. Mrs. Lingle's lines include McCloskeys, Oylers, Bryans, Foresmans, Piatts and Holters in addition to Thompsons. As indicated elsewhere their Leathers and Shirk ancestry is shared equally. Tracing back further in each of their family lines are found the names Martin, Marshall, Kaup, Homler, Spohn, Fagen, Gould, Bott, Dieffenderfer, Freeman, Hostrander and Failor.

In the Bicentennial year of 1976 the Centre County Historical Society, in an appropriate ceremony, buried in a sealed vault a number of historical mementos. This vault, the location of which is identified by a bronze plaque in the sidewalk in Bellefonte's town square, is bequeathed to the county inhabitants of 2076 and is to be opened in that Tricentennial year. Included in the vault is a copy of the History of Liberty Township, mentioned heretofore.

Historical, Geographical and Factual Background

On June 21, 1839 our county of Clinton was formed from parts of Centre and Lycoming Counties. In May, 1850 Bald Eagle Township, in this relatively new county, was divided by a line running northeasterly from about the middle of its southern border. The eastern section retained the Bald Eagle name. The western part was given the same name as the stream that flowed along its western edge and the town that was built along this stream — a name that had come down from the Delaware Indians — Beech Creek. However, the Indians did not use the words beech and creek. Their term was "Schauweminsch-Hanne," which meant beech stream.

Histories of the Indians reveal that one branch of the Great Shamokin Path of the early tribes left the Susquehanna River at Great Island, below Lock Haven, and followed Bald Eagle Creek to Beech Creek, where it was again divided. The Bald Eagle Path continued up the valley, turned south, crossed the creek near Milesburg and passed through the gap. It then followed a generally westward direction through Warriors Mark, Tyrone and Hollidaysburg. The other branch turned up Marsh Creek, went through Romola and Yarnell, then ascended the mountains to reach the Clearfield area and eventually Kitanning.

The name "Beech Creek" had been applied before 1807 to the settlement that was developing about one mile upstream from the mouth of the fast-flowing, crystal-clear creek, with the beech trees along its banks. Bald Eagle Township assessment records, prepared in late 1807 for the year 1808, indicate that certain of its taxable property was at "Beech Creek." This should clear the misconception that there was no Beech Creek until our post office was changed to that name from Quigley's Mills. One book, A Picture of Clinton County, published in 1942 as a Federal WPA project sponsored by our county commissioners, goes so far as to declare that our town was not named Beech Creek until the borough was incorporated in 1869. Incidentally, the information in this book becomes even less regarded when one finds the David cemetery in Beech Creek Township listed as the Quay cemetery.

During the past seventy-five years sole credit for the founding of Beech Creek town has somehow gone to Michael Quigley. The beginning event is given as the building of his grist mill in 1812. Official records show that Mr. Quigley came here in 1814, the year in which the mill project was begun. In November of that year he was assessed for the ownership of one horse and two cows. By this time our town already had a number of full-time tradesmen and shops. We had at least one weaver, one shoemaker, one cooper, one distiller, one carpenter, two tanners and two sawmills. In the grist mill enterprise Mr. Quigley was one of a partnership of McFadden and Quigley. However, he later purchased Mr. McFadden's interest. For the year 1816 the mill, situated on a 27-acre tract, was first assessed for tax purposes.

When Beech Creek gained a post office in 1828 Michael Quigley became postmaster. Apparently having the option of identifying the new post office, he called it Quigleys Mills. However, the town was still Beech Creek. Letters written from here to Ohio in the 1830's are being preserved by the authors of this story. Even though the return addresses on the outside of the envelopes show Quigleys Mills, the letters, themselves, list Beech Creek, Centre County in the heading. After Mr. Quigley's retirement in 1839 our post office was closed and Beech Creek patrons received their mail through the post office at Eagleville, now Blanchard. However, in 1846 we regained a post office and it very appropriately was given the same name as the town. Even if Mr. Quigley cannot be credited as founder of our town, it must be remembered that the grist mill went a long way in making the town a trading center for a very large area.

On February 13, 1800 Centre County had been formed from parts of Huntingdon, Mifflin, Northumberland and Lycoming Counties. At that time this new county included Bald Eagle Township, which then extended from Beech Creek stream to the edge of Flemington, with the Susquehanna River forming a portion of its northeastern boundary. Bald Eagle Township then included that part of Nittany Valley that was removed in 1817 to form Lamar Township. Lamar Township was later divided to form Porter Township. When the second National Census was taken in 1800 our township of Bald Eagle was listed as if it still was a part of Lycoming County. At that time, even though we were very large geographically, we had only 103 family units with a total population of 698, including one black person. A very small number then lived in our Beech Creek area.

As late as 1785 our township of Bald Eagle, then a vast, predominantly wilderness area extending from Lycoming Creek (Newberry area of Williamsport) westward to Moshannon Creek, was a part of Northumberland County, which had been formed on March 21, 1772, with Sunbury as its seat. In 1786 the part of our township that lay west of Beech Creek was separated and named Upper Bald Eagle Township. The original Bald Eagle Township was then further reduced to the area between the mouth of Bald Eagle Creek and Beech Creek stream and was generally known as Lower Bald Eagle Township. When Mifflin County was created on September 8, 1789, with Lewistown as the seat, Upper Bald Eagle Township became a part of that new county. Lower Bald Eagle Township, our area, remained in Northumberland County until April 13, 1796, when we became a part of newly-formed Lycoming County. Thus, we learn that we were a part of Lycoming County for a period of less than four years.

Back in the days when Pennsylvania was divided into just three mammoth counties we were a part of Chester County. On March 11, 1752 a large part of Chester County, including our area, was removed to form Berks County, in which we remained until Northumberland County was erected.

The year 1787 marks the first permanent settlement in our area, when members of the Hays family took up residence. Their land, a grant for military service in the Revolution, was adjacent to the mouth of Beech Creek stream. Within a year the Fearons were occupying land just east of the Hays tract. It is quite possible that there was a relationship between the first Hays and Fearon families. Our earliest settlers, and those who followed, will be more fully discussed in a subsequent chapter devoted to this subject.

Our valley, which extends from the Tyrone area eastward to the Susquehanna River, and the mountain range that walls us in on the south were named for Indian Chief Bald Eagle, whose nest was located in a narrow gap about twelve miles west of us. The mountain itself, along which flows Bald Eagle Creek, was once known as Muncy Mountain. Traveling northward in our area from Bald Eagle and Beech Creek streams one passes from fairly level, rich bottom land through rolling hills, most of which are used for farming or pasture land. The traveler soon reaches the mountainous area of the Allegheny Plateaus. This rugged terrain, once wealthy in virgin timber and minerals, was responsible for much of our early development and industrial growth. In addition, its freshwater streams and deep, thickly-vegetated ravines have provided good fishing and perhaps the best hunting ground in the commonwealth. The southern portion of our township is drained principally by Canoe, Sugar and Masden Runs. Our northern mountainous area is drained by Big Run, Monument Run and Twin Run, which flow into Beech Creek stream, and Tangascootac Creek, which empties directly into the Susquehanna.

The chief sources of county taxes in the early 1800's were land, horses and cows. No mention was made of buildings except those used for industrial purposes, such as sawmills and tanyards. Perhaps the local taxing authorities were allowed to collect on houses, barns, etc. Almost every family owned at least one horse and one cow, but few families owned more than two horses or two cows. Single men who worked, but did not own taxable property, were taxed by the county for their occupations. Additional items taxed at various times included gold watches, money-at-interest, and collateral inheritances. Our township's assessor for its first taxable year (1801) in the new county of Centre was James Boyd (Sr.), a Revolutionary War veteran.

For the annual assessment of 1828 each city, borough and township assessor was authorized by the Commonwealth to report each destitute family not already in possession of a Bible, and to indicate the language spoken by each. In what was described as a "Benevolent undertaking" the Philadelphia Bible Society provided a free copy of the "Holy Scriptures" to each such family. Recipients in our township, according to the report of our assessor, John F. McCormick, were the families of William DeHaas, Benjamin Johnston, John Lannen and James Miller, all of whom spoke the English language. A copy of one of these Bibles, if preserved to this day, should have exceptional value.

In 1830, our assessor, John Montgomery, had to place each parcel of land in one of twelve categories, according to its relative value. The largest plot had three hundred acres and was leased by the owner, Henrietta Craig, a daughter of Brig. General John Philip and Eleanor (Bingham) DeHaas. This farm was placed in category four with a value of eleven dollars an acre, or a total of $3300. The county tax amounting to $10.54 was paid by the then lessor, Paul Lingle, who had come from Linglestown in Dauphin County and replaced David Courter on this tract. The next lessor was George Haagen, who later became the owner. Land in category one was valued at seventeen dollars an acre, while that placed in category twelve had a value of only twelve cents per acre. Trades and occupations were classified by four categories, ranging from $50 to $300 of annual income. Doctors, of course, earned more, but not much more. Each was placed in one of three divisions, ranging from $300 to $500 in annual income.

When Beech Creek Township was organized in 1850 the two supervisors were Joseph Linn, son of Andrew and Martha (Polk) Linn and Thomas Crispen, who, after the death of his first wife, Hannah, and in advanced years of age, remarried and had several more children. The first justices of the peace were Thomas Packer, son of Eli and Ann F. (Thomas) Packer, and Andrew White, whose wife, Eliza, was a daughter of Michael and Mary (Clark) Quigley. Other officers were: Cline Quigley, a son of Michael; John McGhee, a son of John and Elizabeth (Linn) McGhee; Giles W. Halenbake, son of Henry Halenbake of New York state, and husband of Frances Johnson, the daughter of Nathaniel and Sarah (Willis) Johnson, natives of England; Austin Leonard, a son of Theodore and Elizabeth Leonard of Massachusetts, who married, first, Julia Ann, a daughter of Moses and Hannah (Packer) Packer, and later Anna Eliza (Knepley) Packer, the widow of Vickers Packer and the daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Courter) Knepley; Joseph M. Smith, a son of Roland and Mary Smith of the Philadelphia area; Abraham Bitner, son of John and Susanna (Nestlerode) Bitner; William Masden, son of Justus and Elizabeth

This house, built in 1800 and crumbling for the past eighty years, is still in evidence on the Bossert farm.

Lower Water Street under flood waters.

Masden, who had moved here from Liberty Township before William was born; Christian Bollinger, grandfather of Henry Clay Bollinger Williams, a popular Water Street resident in later years; William Reed, whose daughter, Isabella, became the first wife of David Mapes; and Robert Irvin, who lived here only a very short time before moving into Bald Eagle Township.

In 1852 Solomon "Deacon" Strong, a New York state native, who had come here at an early age, laid out the western portion of his farm into town lots to form much of the central part of Beech Creek. The town grew rather fast from that point as evidenced by the fact that in February, 1869 it was granted a borough charter. About fifty years earlier two brothers, John and Nicholas Quigley, who were tailors and close relatives of Michael Quigley, moved their families to Beech Creek and established shops. By 1869 with many Quigley descendants and in-laws in important and official positions, the new borough was incorporated as Quigleytown rather than Beech Creek. However, the townspeople petitioned council and by August of that same year the name was reverted to the original Beech Creek. There is no record that any attempt was made in 1869 to tamper with the Beech Creek post-office identification.

The first burgess of the new borough was James Clark, son of William and Sarah (Hays) Clark, and husband of Rebecca Quigley. Councilmen were as follows: Asher Packer, a son of Moses Packer and the husband of Nancy Hall, the daughter of Jesse Hall, born in New Jersey, and his wife, Betty (Johnson) Hall, a native of England; George Furst, who had come from lower Nittany Valley at about the time of his marriage to Elizabeth Stewart, a Quigley descendant; A.H. Knecht, who had come from Easton as a business partner of George D. Hess; John Ligget, a son of John and Susanna (Neff) Ligget; and Charles R. Keyes (pronounced Kise), a son of Stillman and Eliza (Strong) Keyes, who had come from New York state. Other borough officers at that time were: George Wensel, the son of Everett and Catharine (Rhumsbutt) Wensel, both natives of Germany, and the husband of Ellen Eliza (Quigley) Wensel, a daughter of Nicholas and Elizabeth (Moore) Quigley; Hugh White, whose daughter, Martha, became the second wife of Civil War captain, James A Quigley; George Q. Williams, a son of George and Susan (Quiggle) Williams and husband of Elizabeth Bollinger; Harrison Miller, who had come from Lehigh County and married Sara Amanda, the daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (James) Linn; John Mason, whose wife, Martha, was a sister of Sara Amanda Linn; Solomon Strong, the developer and entrepreneur; John McGhee, identified previously; and John W. Crays, who died seven years later at age 39.

In 1875 Mr. Strong laid out the eastern portion of the borough in town lots. His land was surveyed and mapped by James Clark, and included that which was shortly thereafter conveyed to the original developers of the Beech Creek Railroad. Mr. Strong's layout maps are currently in the possession of the authors of this story. Many years earlier the section of town between Water and western Harrison Streets was laid out and named "Florence," likely for the wife or a daughter of the developer. Florence was used on deeds, etc. to better identify locations. For example, an 1848 obituary said that William Williams of Beech Creek died at Florence. His widow, Ann (Lingle) Williams, lived until her death in 1897 in the house on Water Street now occupied by the Heimer family. It is quite understandable that because of the likeness of names our Florence area is sometimes confused with the Floral area. Floral was the official name of the post office that served the Laurel Run area until rural delivery was inaugurated there in 1909.

Of the township and borough officers named in this chapter, seven were local postmasters and will be listed in a later chapter. In addition a high percentage were drawn from business and professional ranks and they had a keen interest in maintaining the community as a desirable place to live. For example, records show that in August, 1906 our councilmen, Dr. H.H. Mothersbaugh, John P. Wynn, George F. Hess, W. Frank Berry, Edwin R. Reed, G. Thomas Furst, Timothy McCarthy and W.A. Dugan, took definite action to force the removal of manure that was creating a stench on Locust Street. The guilty party was a local justice of the peace, which indicates that no favoritism was shown, not even to fellow borough officers. Would not a community-minded council such as theirs take action on some of today's problems, including noise and dust from various types of motor vehicles, unlicensed motorcycles, clogged streets, poor sidewalks, dogs running loose, the indifference of Pennsylvania Department of Transportation toward local problems of their making, etc.?

Churches

In his book published in 1877 evangelist Nathan Johns Mitchell, organizer of Churches of Christ in Bald Eagle Valley and elsewhere, tells of responding to an invitation to come to Beech Creek for outdoor services in the summer of 1832. The meeting was held on Nestlerode Island, south of the grist mill, where seats and a pulpit were improvised by lumberman John Nestlerode, himself a member of the Mennonite faith. This particular meeting marked the beginning of the local Church of Christ and led to the eventual construction of the present church building in Blanchard, where a "Century With Christ" was celebrated in 1932. This building, built in 1867, was preceded by a wooden structure, likely of logs, on the opposite side of the street on a spot now occupied by part of the cemetery. The house of worship had remained at Beech Creek until 1848 or later. An obituary of that year listed the decedent as a member of the Disciple Church at Beech Creek.

In May of 1837 preacher Mitchell became the first minister of any denomination to establish residence in Beech Creek. In April, 1839, shortly after the death of Mrs. Mitchell's mother, the family moved to Howard to occupy the Packer homestead, this being the birthplace of Mrs. Mitchell. While living in Beech Creek Mr. Mitchell taught school for one term. William M. Bauman, who lives in the Lamar area, is a great, great grandson of Nathan J. Mitchell. By his own story, recounted with the aid of a well-kept diary, and published in 1877, Mr. Mitchell acknowledged that his congregation was preceded in Beech Creek by the Methodists. Therefore the Methodists were first organized some time before the summer of 1832 and not in 1833 as sometimes recorded. In 1834 the Methodists erected the first church building in the township. Their one-room, pine-log structure, located northwest of town, just outside the present borough limits, was later shared with the Presbyterians. Early Methodist circuit riders who preached in this building included Timothy Lee, Fern Brown, James Hunter, James Sanks, Switzer Paulsgrove, John Anderson, Abram Britten, J.S. McMurray and Messrs. Gutwald, MacClay and Ball.

Presbyterian Church.

In 1868 the Methodists constructed on Harrison Street a large two-story, brick edifice with bell tower and bell. The bricks were made by Mexican-born Francisco "Frank" Wallace at his kiln on Sugar Run, just north of town, not on the west side of Beech Creek stream as occasionally reported. This building has been used steadily to this day and gives promise of serving for many years to come. In 1926 a kitchen, with space beneath for central heating equipment, was added to the rear of the church. Since that time a number of interior improvements have been made including the installation in 1957 of a pipe organ, which, since that time, has been melodiously responding to the skillful hands of organist, Joseph M. DeHaas, son of Morton and Chrissie (Linn) DeHaas.

From 1873 to 1883 Beech Creek was headquarters for a Methodist charge that included Mill Hall, Flemington and Laurel Run. The parsonage was located on Vesper Street across the street from the present school building. One of the occupants of the parsonage was Rev. Theodore S. Faus, who had married Martha Williams of Laurel Run, daughter of John and Mary (Hoy) Poorman Williams. At that time the trustees were John Ligget, Samuel Hall, William Trexler, Daniel Lose, J. D. Engles, Abner McCloskey and George W. Wensel. During the long period of its existence the present church building served for the following ministers, some of whom represented the Mill Hall charge, some the previously mentioned Beech Creek charge, but with most from the present Howard charge:

Thomas F. McClure	1868-1870
J. W. Buckley	1870-1873
J. Foster Bell	1873-1874

Max B. Cook	1958-1962
William B. Starr	1963-1969
Lawrence Focht	1969-1977
Norman L. Handy	1977-1980

As indicated previously the Presbyterians first used the Methodists' building. In 1865 the Presbyterians purchased a plot of land on Main Street and soon afterward began the construction of the Beech Creek Memorial Presbyterian Church. The first major improvement to the building was the addition of a belfry and bell in the early 1920's. During the latter part of the twenties a kitchen and dining room, with space beneath for a heating boiler, were added. The next major improvement was a new Hammond organ. Having been constructed almost simultaneously, this church, the Methodist Church and the Church of Christ at Blanchard are of very similar design. Then too, each of the various major improvements at these three churches were scheduled at nearly the same time. Since 1857 the pastors, usually shared with the sister church in Mill Hall, have been:

H. S. Doolittle	1857-1862
W. G. E. Agnew	1862-1872
George Warrington	1873-1874
L. L. Houghawaut	1875-1883
W. A. Jenks	1883-1885
S. W. Pomeroy	1886-1899
L. F. Brown	1899-1907
William M. Grant	1908-1909
A. D. Bateman	1910-1919
Louis V. Barber	1920-1925
Courad Bluhm	1926-1934
Lindley W. Cook	1935-1939
John S. Lonsinger	1939-1942
Carl C. Gray	1943-1945
George A. Virchick, Jr.	1947-1950
Edward L. Junkin	1952-1959
Timothy W. Held	1960-1964
C. Robert Meyer	1965-1966
Donald Visscher	1967-1968

In addition to the above the local congregation was also served by pastors Van Sickle, Bunsteen and Hawthorne. During the 1950's Rev. J. W. Dean served as supply minister.

The Wesleyan Church, formerly the Pilgrim Holiness Church, is the newest of the community's congregations. Church services were held at various places, including private homes, public buildings and vacant houses until about the 1920's. At that time a dwelling on Maple Avenue was converted to serve as both a place of worship and a parsonage. In the early 1930's an attractive frame church facing Main Street was constructed on church property, after which the former church building was reconverted to provide a full two-story parsonage building. The recent application of aluminum siding to the church building guarantees continued attractiveness and a minimum of maintenance.

The following list is the best obtainable record of the ministers who served this congregation on a regular or temporary basis: Liden Adams, Floyd Baker, William C. Bloom, Ralph Davie, Robert Detmer, Philip Doyle, Mr. Gangaware, Russell Gardner, Philip Gazal, Norman L. Handy, Robert Heckert, Harley B. Hoffman, Mr. McCarthy, Edwin Mayes, William Merrill, Ronald Murphy, Mr. Philips, J. C. Sherwood, Fred Strawser, Harold Tallman, William Welch.

Cemeteries

The question of which is our oldest cemetery has not been resolved. In contention for the distinction are two vastly different appearing burial grounds. One is the David Cemetery in Beech Creek Township on the hard-surfaced road leading northwesterly from Sugar Run. No burials have been made there for many, many years, and the plot has been allowed to descend to a deplorable state. It is overrun with trees and underbush to the extent that a passerby, only a few feet distant, is unable to see the markers. This is partly because most of them are lying on the ground. This cemetery was started by the pioneering David family, and without doubt contains the remains of Daniel David, the Revolutionary War soldier. Efforts to locate a newspaper story of some seventy years ago, in which the burials at this cemetery were listed, have not been successful, but will be continued. In addition to Davids and their descendants some of the Liggets are buried here.

The other contender is the Hays-Fearon Cemetery, which, if not the oldest, does have the distinction of being our best-kept cemetery. It was started by the Hays and Fearon families, who had settled close by and began farming before 1800. This cemetery was also allowed to deteriorate for a number of years for the same reason that affected the David Cemetery. Too few of the kin of the early burials were living in the area. Fortunately, however, the thoughtfulness and diligence of J. Aaron Haugh, along with the assistance of others such as George F. Hess, affected a restoration project that turned this plot from one of disgrace to one of beauty. Burials include Lt. James Hays, a Revolutionary soldier, his wife, Sarah (Brown) Hays, and other members of the early Hays and Fearon families, some of whose graves have no marker. Also buried here are two additional Revolutionary War soldiers, Lt. John Philip DeHaas and Gideon Smith. Of the marked graves at Hays-Fearon a total of twenty-two bear the name Rupert. Next in line is the family surname of Linn, followed by Gummo, DeHaas, Johnson, Hall and Ligget, in this order. Others are of eleven or fewer burials.

The Clark Cemetery on the hill overlooking the town is half in the borough and half in the township. The borough-township boundary crossing diagonally from its southeast corner to its northwest corner, creates an invisible and generally unknown division of this plot into two triangular sections, one in each political subdivision. According to the best authority the land was donated by the Clark family at the time of the death of William Clark in 1851. His wife, Sarah (Hays) Clark, died two years later. For many years afterward all the lots were properly cared for. However, its condition is immensely different today. Some of the lots are well cared for, while others are totally neglected. It has been widely suggested that the organization of an association would solve the problem. Perhaps these words may spur someone into action. Michael Quigley (1778-1858), who is frequently mentioned in this story, and his wife, Mary (Clark) Quigley (1792-1864) are buried here. The greatest number of marked graves is shared by the Linn and Mann families with fourteen each. Then come the names McCloskey, Mapes, Rupert, Clark, Cottle, Heverly, and Lindsey, with eight or more of each.

Old newspaper accounts reveal that some time prior to 1920 an association had been formed to assure continued maintenance of the Clark Cemetery. During that year the following were serving as officers of the association: Charles E. "Dix" Bullock, the blacksmith; Joseph Shuttleworth, whose wife, Dora, was a niece of Mr. Bullock; Frank Mann, the son of Harvey and Clara (McCloskey) Mann, and the husband of Anna (Dickey) Mann; W. Quigley Clark, whose wife, Emma, was a daughter of James and Catharine (Rose) Gardner; Charles Lindsey, the son of Hezekiah and Mary (Bullock) Lindsey; and George Rupert, the son of Barnard and Elizabeth (Hannon) Rupert, and the husband of Ella (McCarthy) Rupert. It is currently reported that the mishandling of finances within the organization caused its disbandment several years later.

In late 1977, at the request of the authors of this story, our county sponsored a government CETA project to do clean-up work at the David Cemetery. This followed similar action at the Clark Cemetery, which had been requested by borough officials. The latter cemetery, it should be repeated, is half in the borough and half in the township. Brush cutting, as was performed at both places, is only a temporary improvement at best. For the long term both cemeteries need grubbing, leveling, sowing of grass seed and regular care.

A very large number of Beech Creek area people are buried at the Blanchard Baptist Cemetery and the Blanchard Church of Christ Cemetery. This is mainly because the membership of these two churches has always included many of our residents. It should be pointed out that the burials at the small dilapidated Nestlerode Cemetery in Liberty Township represent ancestors of a wide percentage of our Beech Creek area residents.

Schools

Early schools were of the one-room type, generally placed in locations convenient to the greatest number of pupils. The building was usually erected in the corner of a farmer's field, on a plot that had been donated or sold cheaply. If a deed was actually prepared it was seldom recorded, and was usually lost or misplaced over the years. This arrangement gave the particular farmer a number of advantages. His own children would have only a short distance to walk to school; he could board the teacher and the teacher could tutor his children. In addition, the school was given the name of the farmer, which provided some prestige, and, if ever closed, there was the possibility of the land, including the building, reverting to his ownership.

The first school in the township was located just east of town. It was erected in 1810 on Fearon property and, in all likelihood, was called the Fearon school. It was this school where Buckham "Buck" Claflin taught for several years. He is best remembered as the father of Victoria (Claflin) Woodhull-Martin, a one-time candidate for president of the United States on the Women's Rights ticket. The second school was built about the year 1820 along Beech Creek stream, about one mile above the present borough limits. The third school, built about 1840, east of town on land of Robert Fearon, replaced the first school. The fourth school was built just above Beech Creek, and, in all probability replaced the second school. In 1882 Beech Creek Township had seven rural schools. They were: (1) Haagen, located on the main highway east of town; (2) Masden, on the Masden Hollow road, which leads from the same highway at a point farther east; (3) Bitner, farther north at the foot of the mountain; (4) Hubbard, on the road then leading mainly to Marsh Creek, now to Monument and Orviston; (5) Quay, on the hill directly north of Maidsville; (6) Sugar Run, on the Sugar Run road about a mile from town; and (7) Mountain, along the Bald Eagle Valley Railroad, on the mountain road leading to Mill Hall.

The first school within the limits of what is now Beech Creek borough was built in 1856 on Main Street on land purchased from Anstin

Leonard. In 1867 a two-story, four-room school was erected on the northwest corner of Harrison and Fairview Streets. This school was replaced in 1904 by the large brick structure on Vesper Street and a two-year high school course was inaugurated, with the first graduates receiving their diplomas in 1909. The high school had been designed to serve students from both the borough and the township. In 1914 a three-year course was adopted, resulting in no graduations that year.

As the years went by more and more local graduates enrolled elsewhere, at their own expense for transportation or board, in order to gain a four-year diploma. Most attended Lock Haven High School, where two additional years of study were required in spite of each having the minimum graduation credits after just one year. Those going elsewhere were graduated after one additional year. At the same time graduates of two-year high schools in the area were graduated at Lock Haven after a total of just four years. In 1930 our school board, realizing the unfairness involved, awarded diplomas to our potential 1931 graduates along with the 1930 class and reduced our high school to a two-year course. Following the graduation of the class of 1946 our high school was closed. Several years later, with the borough and township as part of the Bald Eagle-Nittany jointure, the elementary school was reduced from eight grades to six. Consolidation of borough and township elementary grades required additional space. At that time a modern annex was attached to the rear of the old brick building, which is still in apparent good condition.

In the early 1860's Pulaski F. Hyatt, who represented the seventh generation of the Hyatt family in America, taught four terms at the Bitner School and boarded with the Abraham Bitner family. He later received degrees in pharmacy, dentistry and medicine. On June 8, 1893 President Grover Cleveland appointed Dr. Hyatt to be U. S. diplomat to Cuba, a position he held with distinction throughout the insurrection that followed. Dr. Hyatt, according to authorities, was a direct descendant of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski of Revolutionary War fame. In all likelihood he was a close relative, possibly a brother, of Rev. L. B.

Hyatt, who preached at the Blanchard Church of Christ in the 1860s.

In previous writings the authors of this history have mentioned the Pennsylvania school law, passed on April 4, 1809, which required each assessor to annually list "all children between the ages of 5 and 12, whose parents are unable to pay for their schooling." Their tuition fee, usually amounting to about three cents per day, plus the cost of books, paper, etc., were borne by the taxpayers. It is written that each such child was conspicuously identified by the wealthier students, a condition that sometimes put the parents, as well as the children in a humiliating position. Many poor parents, therefore, preferred to raise their children uneducated. The 1809 school act, declared by some to contain more philanthropy than wisdom, was replaced in 1834 and 1835 by legislation to provide free education for all, with no distinction between rich and poor. Controversial as it may have been, it nevertheless, seems certain that the act of 1809 provided many poor children with a basic training that led to notable careers. Legislation requiring school districts to provide pupils the free use of textbooks was not forthcoming until near the end of the century.

In addition to Buckham Claflin and Rev. N. J. Mitchell; the following have been identified as early schoolmasters: John Philip DeHaas (III), who had a long tenure and Joseph Ranken, Abraham Row, Thomas Price and Alexander Fargus, about whom very little more is known.

A compilation has been made of the graduating classes of Beech Creek High School from the very first to the last. It is observed that of the unusually large class of 1925 only one member now lives in our area. In contrast, two members, or one half of the class of 1918 still reside here. Of the twenty-seven 1930 graduates not one now lives within our area. The lists of graduates for 1932, 1934 and 1942 cannot be verified as complete and correct. Official school records have been lost or destroyed. Of the fourteen members of these three small classes who were personally approached, not one could positively identify all his fellow graduates. It is added, rather sadly, that few, if any, were sufficiently interested to aid in the research. It is only fitting to pay tribute, at this point, to Florence McGhee, daughter of Oscar and Jemima (Haagen) McGhee. Florence, a 1910 graduate, named, without any hesitation, the ten members of her class.

Occupations and Professions

Tailors

Of the fourteen men who were engaged in tailoring in our township in the first half of the nineteenth century at least three were in our immediate area. They were John and Nicholas Quigley, likely father and son and John Orner, Jr. Orner's father, a stone mason, had settled at the eastern end of our township some time before 1810. Tailors in the latter half of the 1800's included Joseph Brownlee, William Thompson, Benjamin Bierly and Warren Walz, a son of John G. Walz, the saddler, who is mentioned elsewhere. During the early 1920's I. W. Buck moved his tailoring shop from Blanchard to the old Berryhill building on West Main Street, long known as the "Seven Kitchens." Mr. Buck remained in this building until it was razed in 1923 by James Reish of the Fairpoint area. The present highway passes over the spot, at the end of Harrison Street, where the building stood. Mr. Buck and his former neighbor, Peg Rupert, then occupied, together, the old Nestlerode house, directly across the creek from the opposite end of Harrison Street. When this house burned Peg moved to the old fish house, farther upstream, and "I. W." left for Philadelphia to live with relatives.

Millers

It appears that very few, if any, of the owners of the Beech Creek grist mill during its long existence were millers themselves. Actual millers in our then broad township during the early 1800's included John Antes, Isaac Harvey, John Packer, John Elder, Hugh Baker, Andrew Yeager, Valentine Confer, John Harvey, and William Carson. It seems reasonable to believe that some of these worked at our mill, yet none of them owned it. Joseph Morrison DeHaas, son of John P. and Hannah (Morrison) DeHaas was the local miller from before 1850 to some time after 1860. Mr. DeHaas, his first wife, Sarah (Heckman) DeHaas and their family lived very close to the mill at that time. Mr. DeHaas later performed milling chores in various parts of Centre County before finally settling in Liberty Township. It appears that his replacement at the local mill was William Peirson, who also lived close to the mill. Later local millers included: William B. Foresman, a son of John Foresman and his second wife, Maria; William Strunk, a son of Benjamin and Mary (Pecht) Strunk; Hayes Strunk, son of William, above, and his wife, Anna (Grove) Strunk; and I. J. Rohrbaugh, a distant relative of the earlier Rorabaughs of our area, but with a slightly different spelling of the name.

Tanners

Tanners were not plentiful in our area. In the early 1800's we had Michael Kirk. During the 1830's, and later, Asher Packer, son of Moses and Hannah (Packer) Packer, was employed at this trade. In the 1860's Miller L. McKean, a tanner in the Zion area, moved to Beech Creek and established a large tannery. More is said of Mr. McKean in the industrial section of this history.

Saddlers

Thomas Armstrong Smith, the son of Revolutionary War soldier, Gideon Draper Smith and his wife Sarah (Frederick) Smith, maintained a saddlery shop in our township from about 1820 to about 1840. Many area residents descend from Thomas Armstrong Smith Rogers, namesake of Mr. Smith. Other early saddlers were Henry Crook, John Allen and David Clark, all of whom were active in the 1830's. Some time between 1860 and 1870 John Walz, who had followed the trade in Howard during the 1850's and 1860's, opened a saddlery shop in Beech Creek. A more recent saddler was Frank Berry, who is mentioned in another paragraph.

Shoemakers

Shoemaking was very popular in the early days, and most of the shoemakers were real craftsmen, being able to make a complete pair of shoes according to the style and size desired. We read in historical books that Jeremiah Rockwell opened a shoe shop in 1826, and was followed three years later by Simon Lingle, brother of John Lingle, the weaver. Neither continued at the trade very long, but it is interesting to note that shortly thereafter each took a Liberty Township girl for his bride. Jeremiah married Susanna Bitner, daughter of John and Susanna (Nestlerode) Bitner, while Simon married Susanna Kunes, daughter of Daniel and Hannah (Rorabaugh) Kunes. Despite historical mention, neither, as has already been pointed out, contributed much to local shoemaking. Furthermore neither contributed much to later development. After several years Mr. Rockwell established himself elsewhere, finally settling, it has been reported, in the Towanda area, from which he had come. Mr. Lingle, who had taken his younger brother, Joseph, into the business, dissolved the partnership on November 1, 1836 and moved to Blanchard, where he was instrumental in the development of that town. Younger brother, Joseph, became Centre County sheriff fourteen years later and moved to Bellefonte, where he spent the rest of his life.

Before the time of Rockwell and Lingle our broad township, exclusive of the Nittany Valley portion, had at least twenty-six shoemakers, including James David, one of the sons of Revolutionary War veteran Daniel David. Of these twenty-six, seven continued at the trade for only one year; three lasted two years, and three lasted three years. Two reasons have been advanced for this high turnover: (1) many entrants soon realized that they would never become true successes, and (2) some were floaters always looking for a greener area.

Shoemakers who entered the trade between 1826 and 1850 presented a similar situation, but with a somewhat better record of endurance. During this period we find John T. Packer, D. William Council, a son of John and Rhoda (David) Council, William Masden, son of Justus and Elizabeth Masden and David Lingle, brother of Joseph and Simon. After 1850 conditions within this trade were much more stable. At about that time William Trexler became a very permanent shoemaker in Beech Creek. Mr. Trexler and his wife, Elmira (White) Trexler, had a son, Fleming, who also learned the trade. After dabbling in several other fields of work, Fleming, some time before his father's death, returned in earnest to the shoemaking trade. Thus the Trexler shoe repair shop was continued for a period approaching seventy years. Henry H. Berry, son of William and Anne (Orner) Berry, spent many years at shoemaking before he began devoting the majority of his time to civic pursuits and elective offices including tax collector. Mr. Berry is remembered as being a real tax collector as opposed to the "tax receivers" of today. George Wensel, who was born in Germany, learned the shoemaking trade under Mr. Council. He maintained a shop for many years in the upper Water Street home that was later remodeled extensively by Frank Hunter, son of James and Clara (Nestlerode) Hunter. John McGhee and his brother-in-law, Nelson Caldwell, operated shoe shops for a period of about twenty years. During the 1860's Samuel Furl embarked on a shoemaking career of apparent short duration.

William Franklin Berry, who had learned shoemaking under his father, Henry, switched his leather working talents to harness making when he established a saddlery shop during the 1880's. In 1912 Mr. Berry sold his Main Street property to Conrad Glock and moved to his new brick building farther up the street. His new building, designed for both a residence and a shop, is now occupied by the family of Merwin Johnson, a grand nephew of Mr. Berry. Mr. Glock, who lived with his uncle, Casper Peter after his arrival from Germany, later married Fannie Miller, a daughter of John and Nancy (Nestlerode) Miller. Also during the 1880's William L. McKean discontinued his planing mill business to work at the shoemaking trade. A later switch took Mr. McKean into barbering.

It was during the career of the younger Mr. Trexler that factory-made shoes replaced the old hand-made variety. It was also during his career that most of the real shoemakers became just cobblers or shoe repairmen. However, in the 1930's our area gained the services of a craftsman, who, given the task, was capable of constructing a shoe from the sole up. He was Richard Fakoury, now retired and living in Lock Haven. On the last day of December in 1976 the old Trexler shop, a solidly constructed building, was moved east over the old New York Central Railroad bed from its original location on Grant Street to a point in Beech Creek Township to await further planning regarding its future use.

Coopers

The number of persons employed as coopers (barrel makers) grew gradually during the period from 1800 to 1820. However, during the next decade there was a very noticeable increase, especially when compared with the increase in the population or the increase in the number of distillers. It seems logical that the apple trees planted by early settlers were now bearing large quantities of fruit, which produced cider for apple butter making and for vinegar to be used for pickling and preserving purposes. The cooper with the longest record was Joseph Morrison, who lived in our general area. The Clarks, namely William, Samuel, Benjamin, John, Stephen and William, Jr., more or less monopolized the trade. A gradual, but definite, decline of this industry was evident after 1830. After 1850 we find only the names of Daniel Rush and John Miller, in addition to Samuel Clark, who was still active.

Carpenters

It does not require close inspection of the older houses in our area to recognize the skill, handicraft and diligence that went into their construction. Apparently there was a lot of pride in a job well done. However, the one trade that is most difficult to accurately, fairly and completely cover is that of carpenter. Some carpenters, it appears, worked only part time at the trade and were officially listed as farmers, or otherwise. The 1850 census, first to show occupations, listed the following full-time carpenters: Vickers Amos Packer and his brother, Hayes Coates Packer, the cabinet maker who is mentioned elsewhere; James Linn, son of Andrew and Martha (Polk) Linn; George Q. Williams, son of George and Susan (Quiggle) Williams; John Wilson and Benjamin Clark.

By 1860 James McGhee, son of John and Elizabeth (Linn) McGhee and husband of Fannie Gunsallus, the daughter of James and Rachel (or Sarah) Masden Gunsallus, had become a journeyman carpenter. Note: After the death of Rachel (Masden) Gunsallus, widower James Gunsallus married Rachel's younger sister, Sarah. James McGhee's son Oscar also learned the construction trade before he began farming on the old Saul Haagen farm, where his wife, Jemima had been raised. Other carpenters of that period were: John Bickel, whose first wife, Sarah, died in 1863; Thomas Martin, a leader in the construction of the present Church of Christ building at Blanchard; Henry Hanley and McCormick Graham, who finished his career at the railroad shops in Renovo, at which place his wife Mary Ann (Bollinger) Graham died in 1893. Mary Ann was a daughter of Christian and Eliza (Kirk) Bollinger. In his latter years Mr. Graham did part-time ministerial work. Later nineteenth century carpenters included Roland Gunsallus, Joseph Bowes and John Kunes, each of whom had come from Centre County, and their backgrounds are well known to the authors.

Strange as it may seem, since 1900 Beech Creek has had very few carpenters who learned the trade at an early age and remained in it for a full and complete lifetime occupation. An exception was Horace Hubbard, son of Joseph Hubbard and his first wife, Harriet (Weaver) Hubbard. Another was Oscar Kunes, son of John Kunes, listed above, and husband of Alma (Swartz) Kunes, the daughter of Henry and Mary (Confer) Swartz. B. Frank Bowers, an all-round handyman divided most of his time between carpentry and painting, later adding electric wiring to his skills. Much of the area carpentry during this period was done by tradesmen living nearby in Liberty Township. Two craftsmen who fit into this latter category were Charles White, son of John and Martha (Confer) White, and Charles's brother-in-law, Marion Swartz, a son of Joseph and Sarah (Swartz) Swartz. Another was William Bitner, son of John W. and Elizabeth (Berry) Bitner. William's first wife was Martha Winslow, a daughter of Joseph and Laura (Johnston) Winslow; the second was Margaret (Bowes) DeLong, daughter of George and Sarah (Hoover) Bowes, and widow of Jacob DeLong, son of Jonathan and Frances (Bumgardner) DeLong.

Blacksmiths

Historical accounts show that John Baker opened a blacksmith shop on Harrison Street in 1836. True enough, John was a Beech Creek blacksmith, but he was only one of many, and according to official records the year was 1830, not 1836. Furthermore, Mr. Baker was preceded in the trade by at least thirty-three blacksmiths, each of whom worked at the trade for at least a short period. It seems reasonable to believe that at least several of these were located in our specific area, possibly right in town, and with longer records than Mr. Baker's eight years. To sight some examples, Francis Boyce followed blacksmithing from 1801 to 1815; James Clark and William Williams, from 1805 to 1815; James Boyd, Jr., from 1806 to 1814; John Wilson, from 1809 to the time of his death around 1818, after which his widow Catharine was overseer of his estate; James Caldwell, from 1816 to about 1830; and William Courter from 1831 to 1836. Much better records were established by David Rorabaugh and William Smith, both having set up shops in 1820. Mr. Rorabaugh, a grandson of early Liberty Township settlers, Simon and Eve (Reed) Rorabaugh, continued until his death just before 1850. Two of his sons, Christian and David were working at the trade around the middle of the century. Another successful blacksmith of that period was Samuel Knepley, whose career spanned the period from the 1820's into the 1850's. During the 1820's Peter Grove, a Revolutionary War veteran was doing blacksmithing in some part of our township.

Other early blacksmiths, most of whom are definitely known to have been in our specific area, were Jacob Runner, who later moved to Liberty Township, James McCloskey, William Hays, James Hays, Washington Heverly, James Heverly and Joshua Roan, who married Ann DeHaas, daughter of Lt. John P. and Ann (Shippin) DeHaas. Around 1839 came David Miller, a brother of Fulton and Carpenter Miller, the plasterers. David, who had a long and busy career, was the father of Carpenter X. Miller and the grandfather of George B. Miller the telegraph operator. Postmaster Clair Johnson was a great grandson of Fulton Miller. Beginning in the 1840's Washington Heverly began concentrating his metal-working ability exclusively to the manufacture of axes. His descendants include Mildred (Heverly) Scantlin, Louise (Bitner) Allen, Harold Heverly and Clifford Heverly of Lock Haven.

During his long career David Miller saw many blacksmiths come and go. Included were John Gilmore, Lucius Carpenter, Joseph Bullock and John Dalton. However, there were several, whose records may have even surpassed Mr. Miller's. Lemuel Shearer began pounding the anvil before 1850 and continued to do so until around the time of his death in

An early horseless carriage.

This house, built around 1792 by Lieutenant James Hays (1740-1817) on land granted for war service, was later converted for the storage of hay. It was located just off the road leading to Bald Eagle Creek. The 1912 picture shows Caroline Cook (1856-1927), great granddaughter of Mr. Hays.

1901. Shortly after 1850 William Bullock and his wife Margaretta (McKinley) Bullock came here from the Milesburg area. William set up a blacksmithing dynasty that was to last for almost a hundred years. This was possible because William's sons, Willis Park Bullock and Charles Ellsworth "Dix" Bullock continued at this trade until they reached rather advanced ages. During the major portion of their careers Dix limited his work almost exclusively to farriery while Willis did general metal working and little or no horseshoeing. Dix, once described as of muscle and bone, maintained this physique throughout his long career. In fact Dix's life and labors paralleled very closely those of Henry Longfellow's "Village Blacksmith." Only one thing was noticeably missing — the "Spreading Chestnut Tree."

Blacksmiths who set up shop during the decade of the 1860's were John Curns, David Martin, Irvin Hanscomb and Irvine Keyes, another son of Stillman and Eliza, whose wife was Frances Clark, daughter of James and Rebecca. The 1870's brought John T. Hunter, a Civil War veteran and ancestor of our area Hunters, who had come from Mill Hall and later moved to Liberty Township. Another blacksmith with a long record of quality work was Edward Martz, whose shop was directly across the highway from the Haagen School. Mr. Martz taught the trade to his son, Charles, a current resident of the township, who followed metal working all his life, with his first outside occupation being with the Beech Creek Truck and Auto Company. The last blacksmith shop in the township was operated by Christ Heaton at the same location where William Bullock closed his career. Leslie Heaton, brother of Christ, had operated a shop in the borough in a building erected by William Smith, son of J. Edwin and Ida (Aley) Smith, for automobile painting.

Weavers

It is hard to conceive the popularity of the weaving trade in the early days. Although some remained at the occupation for only several years, a total of twenty-two practiced their skills between 1803 and 1839. The weaver with the longest period of activity was Abraham Harleman, who lived at the opposite end of our township in the Fairpoint area. The second best record was established by Benjamin Johnson. It is difficult to pinpoint the exact location of twenty additional weavers. However, there is one exception. He was John Lingle, son of Paul and Mary (Spohn) Lingle, who was occupied at the trade in Beech Creek from 1824 to 1828, during which time he married a local girl, Sarah Miller, and later moved to Ohio.

Cabinet Makers

Our earliest cabinet makers were Hayes Coates Packer, a son of Moses and Hannah (Packer) Packer, and also James Packer, likely a close relative of Coates. The wife of Coates Packer was Ann Eliza Williams, daughter of George and Susan (Quiggle) Williams. Shortly before 1850 Vincent S. Smith, who had earlier come from New York state and married Mary Jane Lingle, only daughter of Simon Lingle, opened a cabinet making shop. Mr. Smith, whose cabinet work included the making of coffins, served two terms as local postmaster. In the early 1800's Isaac Chambers and Joseph Burd directed their wood working talents toward the making of chairs. Harold Packer of Beech Creek is a great, great grandson of Coates Packer, and Jean (Gardner) Laubscher of Lock Haven is a great granddaughter of Vincent Smith.

Canal Boatmen

The coming of canal boat transportation, which started in the 1830's, brought a number of new occupations to the area. Boat captains included the three Lingle brothers, whose careers were sketched in the October, 1971 publication of the Centre County Historical Society. After the closing of the canal, George, the youngest of the three brothers took up farming at Beech Creek, where he was born in 1823. Incidentally he lived until 1923. His brother James began farming in Boggs Township, Centre County, and Alexander went west to continue canal boat work. Area boatmen with shorter careers included: John Winslow, son of Charles and Margaret Winslow, natives of Ireland; John Cook, who later served in the Civil War and married Elizabeth Winslow, sister of John; Thomas Winslow, a brother of John and father of two young canal boatmen of later times — Thomas and Charles; Joseph Quay, who after his marriage to Jemima Miller, daughter of Samuel and Eliza Miller, took up full-time farming; Henry Myers and Joseph Lucas, the latter having come from Centre County; and Robert Grater, who later moved to Liberty Township.

Before the days of the canal heavy cargo was floated downstream from this area on arks. William Strickland, a former ark builder and repairman of grounded arks for the Howardville Furnace Company at the present town of Howard, became a local canal boat builder later in his career.

Justices of the Peace

Although justice of the peace was just a part-time or side-line occupation, it, nevertheless was one of importance. In early years a fairly large percentage of marriages was performed by these officers. Following is the best available account of our justices over the years: Hugh McFadden, William Quay, John McGhee, George W. Sterling, James Clark, James David, James R. Quay, Joseph W. Merrey, John Ligget, George C. McGhee, Jesse S. Hall, Clarence R. Rossman, George F. Hess, Sheldon C. McKean, Pauline (Hawkins) Gundlach, Twyla (Lingle) Yearick and Albert Hamm, in this general order. Early records reveal that in the 1830's Michael Quigley served as justice of the peace in addition to his postmaster duties. His handwritten certificate for the marriage of Asher Packer, son of Moses and Hannah (Packer) Packer, to Nancy Hall, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Johnson) Hall, on May 26, 1836, is being preserved by Jessie (Packer) Vaught of Lock Haven, a granddaughter.

Stone Masons

The excellent work of our early stone masons is still evident in our older homes and especially in the lock of the old canal in Liberty Township between Bald Eagle Creek and the railroad tracks. This, the Beech Creek lock, was built about 1833, and still stands in a very firm condition. Our area did not have as many stone masons as neighboring Liberty Township. One of our first was John Bitner, son of John and Susanna (Nestlerode) Bitner, who married Susan Orner, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Paul) Orner. Others were John and Jesse Harleman and William Wilson.

Potters

There is no evidence of any pottery plants in our immediate area. However, during the 1840's Philip Berry was making pottery at the eastern end of our then large township of Bald Eagle. Some years later Mr. Berry and his wife, Leah, moved to Mt. Eagle, where he joined John Bitner Leathers in his pottery manufacturing enterprise. Leathers pottery, much of which reached the Beech Creek area, has become a collectors' item. A booklet on Pennsylvania pottery, published by the Union County Historical Society in cooperation with Bucknell University, mentions Leathers pottery and credits the authors of this story with providing information.

Plasterers

Because of the less refined methods of very early construction, it is not surprising to find that no plasterers were located in the township before 1836, at which time Isaac Ditsworth and Thomas Harleman, a son of Abraham and Nancy Harleman, began the trade. Harleman Hollow in Beech Creek Township was named for these Harleman families.

By 1838 George Fulton Miller, son of James Miller, had become a qualified plasterer. Mr. Miller, who lived in the house diagonally across from the Methodist Church, later returned to the farm and did plastering only during his spare time. Carpenter Miller, a brother of Fulton, also did some plastering.

Wagon Makers

The earliest wagon maker on record was Richard Berryhill, son of Andrew and Mary (Homler) Berryhill, who came from Jersey Shore and married a local girl, Mary Snyder, whose parents William and Margaret (Marshall) Snyder, later moved from Beech Creek to Blanchard. Mr. Berryhill, owner of the lengthy apartment house on Main Street, known as the Seven Kitchens, doubled as an innkeeper during a portion of his career. A later wagon maker was William Rupert, who was born in Liberty Township to Barnard and Elizabeth (Hannon) Rupert, later returning to that township following a brief residence at the old Moon farm beyond the Beech Creek reservoir in Marion Township. Candace, wife of William, was a daughter of Rev. William A. Ridge, who had served as pastor of both Blanchard churches.

Tinners

During the 1870's Charles Keyes, son of Stillman and Eliza (Strong) Keyes, established himself as a tinner. Mr. Keyes was followed by William R. Linn, who worked at this trade until about the time of his death in 1924. Mr. Linn, a son of James and Mary (Morrison) Linn, sometimes, for no apparent good reason, spelled his name "Lynn."

Butchers

Our first commercial butcher was Daniel "Dance" Kunes, a son of Daniel and Mary (Bechdel) Kunes of Blanchard. Daniel came to Beech Creek Township before 1850, married Mary Mapes, a daughter of James Mapes, in 1869, and established his business at about the same time. The next meat market, started by James Bitner, a son of Christian and Isabella (Sterling) Bitner, was located in a portion of the house now occupied by Russell and Gladys McKinney. In 1905 Mr. Bitner sold his business to Sumner Riddle of Howard, and moved to the Thomas Furl property in the township. Later Mr. Bitner opened another butcher shop in that part of the Ligget Triangle on Locust Street that later served as the ice cream parlor of Nellie Smith, daughter of Thomas and Martha Elizabeth (Nestlerode) Smith. Other butchers of that period included George Whamond, son of David and Christena Whamond, and Cline Q. Confer, a son of James and Catharine (Trexler) Confer. A little later a meat market was opened on Vesper Street by Torrence Hunter, a son of John and Frederica (Smith) Hunter. Mr. Hunter was succeeded by his nephew, John H. Hunter, son of James and Clara (Nestlerode) Hunter, who conducted the business for many, many years. When Mr. Hunter closed his business it marked the end of an era where both the butchering and marketing were done by the same individual.

Barbers

The first full-time barber was James Allison Williams, son of William Williams and his second wife, Ann (Lingle) Williams. Barber Al, as he was familiarly known to distinguish him from his cousin, C. Allison "Al" Williams, the Blanchard merchant, began his career in the 1860's. With no full-time professional barbers prior to that time there may have been some excuse for an occasional shaggy-appearing male. Barber Al's shop on Main Street was destroyed in the big fire of 1903, after which he located on the second floor of the building at the point of the Ligget Triangle. He died in 1906 at the home of another cousin, Henry Williams. Our second barber was William L. McKean, who, as noted elsewhere, first established a planing mill, and later a shoemaker shop. Mr. McKean's three sons, William, Sheldon and Lyle, learned the barber trade and worked locally at various times. In 1914 H. Edward Cox converted the former Ambrose B. Brady store building into a barber shop. Mr. Cox was followed at the trade by his son, Arthur, who has continued the business to this day. Around 1918 William Bolopue, a former Blanchard barber, opened shop in a small building next to the Beech Creek Hotel. Mr. Bolopue soon afterward closed his business and the building was skidded to the Corman farm in Beech Creek Township. In more modern times Walter E. Miller, son of J. Orrie and Virginia (Barger) Miller, conducted barber shops at several different locations in town.

Farmers

Farming, an occupation that was learned from the time of childhood by most of our early settlers, is treated in the chapter of this story that deals with industry.

Telegraph Operators

The occupation of telegraph operator came and went with the rise and decline of rail service in our valley. During the 1909-1910 period thirteen operators lived in Beech Creek. They were: H. Clair Berry, son of W. Frank and Jennie (DeLong) Berry; D. Roy Bitner, son of William N. Bitner and his second wife, Mary Caroline (Lucas) Bitner, who had been the widow of Franklin Pierce Bitner; Michael Flynn, who married Cora, a daughter of Charles and Annie (McGhee) Heverly; Eugene Johnson, son of Joseph and Edith (Berry) Johnson; Simeon Maines, whose tragic death is mentioned elsewhere; Charles W., Irvin and Morrissey Miller, sons of Michael and Sara Clementine (Aikey) Miller; Harry W. Packer, son of George and Maria (Burd) Packer; Fred and Harry Salisbury, sons of Henry and Deborah (Whitefield) Salisbury; Ellis Sundin, who had been transferred here; and Dean Swartz, a son of Joseph Swartz and his wife Alice (Stager) Swartz, who had been the widow of Joseph's older brother, Nathan J. M. Swartz. Others who entered the occupation at about that time or later were George and Ray Bullock, sons of Willis and Annie (Lingle) Bullock; George B. Miller, a grandson of David Miller, the blacksmith; and Stewart Winslow, son of Edward and Annie (Council) Winslow.

Miscellaneous and Diverse Occupations

There is evidence that in the 1820's several windmill makers were located in our township. An early cigar maker was Cline Quigley, a son of Cline and Agnes (Thompson) Quigley. Later came George C. McGhee, son of John and Julian (Harleman) McGhee. As a boy, the male coauthor of this story sampled one of the McGhee cigars, which had been stored for many years in the attic of the old McGhee home now occupied by Dorothy Hunter. During the late 1800's Frank Stahl and his two brothers made cigars in the building that now houses the Linger Inn. During the 1870's, Joseph Linn, son of James and Mary (Morrison) Linn, fashioned axe handles in his shop in the western part of town. Dorothy (Linn) Heverly is a granddaughter of Joseph.

Early sawyers included John Romig, who had come to the area with the William Snyder family and later married Jane Swartz, daughter of Michael and Frances (Bartholomew) Swartz. Another was William Waite, son of Samuel and Polly (Oswalt) Waite. The Waites and Romigs lived near each other on the road leading to Maidsville. For many years Mary and Sarah Romig, daughters of John and Jane, were self-employed milliners. Lee Waite is a grandson of William Waite. Millwrights were likely employed on somewhat of a free-lance basis setting up and repairing machinery in sawmills, grist mills, tanneries, distilleries, etc. Those who followed this trade included Peter C. Gould, who had married Mary Ann Wagner, daughter of George and Susan (Rorabaugh) Wagner. Another was James Quay, who later married Sarah McClure and devoted his full time to farming. George Ruple, who came from New Jersey and married Zylphia (Winslow) Miller,

On an afternoon in March, 1916, when haircuts cost twenty cents and shaves were a dime, Barber H. Edward Cox was ready to finish shaving I. J. Rohrbaugh. Hanging side by side on the wall were calendars that had been distributed by Mr. Rohrbaugh, local grist miller, and John H. Hunter, local butcher. The nearby, lifelike picture was part of a grooming advertisement.

widow of the first Michael Miller, was also a qualified millwright. Michael Miller was the father of Michael Miller (1856-1946) and four other children including Eli, killed in the Civil War and Catharine, who married James Quigley. George and Zylphia had two sons, George McClellan "Clell" Ruple and William Ruple.

In earlier days a number of our men were employed as woodsmen, working mostly out of lumber camps, some located at distant points. Although not a highly skilled occupation the woodsman, nevertheless, had to be a rugged individual. As coal and clay mines opened in this area and west of us a gradually greater number of miners was needed. In 1909, for example, a year in which Wynn's clay mine was in full operation, a total of twenty-one men living in the borough were employed as miners. Without doubt our township was contributing a number of men to the mining industry at that same time.

Postmasters and Rural Mail Carriers

Postmasters from the time of the first post office in 1828 to the year 1885 were: Michael Quigley, whose ancestor, then spelled Quickle, reached America in October, 1736; Dr. David W. Roberts, the first of four consecutive postmasters to be employed during the years 1839 to 1846, when Beech Creek patrons were served by the Eagleville (now Blanchard) post office; Joseph Bumgardner, a long-time justice of the peace in Liberty Township; John Brickley, an early storekeeper in Blanchard; John T. Clark, who engaged in blacksmithing for more than forty years; Austin Leonard, an early fanning mill maker in Beech Creek; George Furst, the merchant; John Brownlee, whose residence in our area was of apparent short duration; Cline Quigley, a merchant and son of Michael and Mary (Clark) Quigley; Christian Bollinger, a farmer and carpenter who lived in both Liberty and Beech Creek townships; Vincent S. Smith, a cabinet maker, who had come from New York state and received two separate postmaster appointments, the first being at a time when Blanchard was served by our post office; and Charles R. Keyes, the tinner.

Postmasters since 1885 have been: Marshall Packer, whose wife, Mary, was from the Johnson families that had come from England; Mr. Smith, serving his second term; Enoch H. Hastings, who had come from Centre County; Fleming P. Trexler, whose shoemaking skills are mentioned elsewhere; Henry C. B. Williams, son of George Q. and Elizabeth (Bollinger) Williams; Harry Bollinger Clark, son of James and Rebecca (Quigley) Clark; Harry H. Fearon, son of John T. and Annie (Johnson) Fearon; Morrissey C. Miller, former telegraph operator; Israel J. Rohrbaugh, who had come to Beech Creek as a grist miller; Clair E. Johnson, son of Eugene and Daisy (Miller) Johnson; and Everett Cox of State College, who by virtue of changes in postal regulations, became the first non-resident to hold this office.

In 1902 a rural delivery route was established at our post office. The first rural carrier was Sidney Fearon, another son of John T. and Annie. Mr. Fearon was followed by Morton C. DeHaas, son of Joseph Morrison DeHaas and his second wife, Susan (Shirk) DeHaas. Mr. DeHaas carried the mail from 1910 to 1924 by horse and buggy, and by automobile from 1924 to the time of his retirement in 1942. Mr. DeHaas's last substitute, Berton J. Confer, son of Cline Q. Confer and his first wife, Mary Frances (Loomis) Confer, took over in 1942 and served until 1944, when Frank A. Johnson, son of Joseph and Edith (Berry) Johnson was appointed regular carrier. Mr. Johnson was succeeded in 1948 by his son, Joseph, who is the present carrier. An earlier long-time substitute for Mr. DeHaas was William Myers, son of L. Melvin and Susan Pauline (Bitner) Myers. A number of letters, written between 1858 and 1863 and bearing the Beech Creek and Eagleville postmarks, have been preserved and are presently in the hands of the authors of this story. Harry J. Haines is the present substitute rural carrier.

Professional Occupations

During much of the last half of the nineteenth century James Clark did surveying and map making in addition to operating his store. Mr. Clark's wife, Rebecca Ann, was a daughter of Nicholas Quigley, the tailor. James David, who served at least one term as county commissioner, did full-time surveying in his latter years. Additional local surveyors and civil engineers included William Montgomery, who married Jane Lucas, a daughter of Nathan H. and Nancy (Gardner) Lucas of Liberty Township, and settled in Beech Creek; John W. Crays, whose career was cut short by his death on May 26, 1876; Thompson Snyder, who as a young boy came from Snyder County with his parents, William and Margaret (Marshall) Snyder, and later married Harriet Brady, daughter of James and Mary (Locke) Brady; and William "Billy" Mitchell, who was born to Rev. Nathan J. and Sarah (Packer) Mitchell after the family moved from Beech Creek to Howard. At Howard they occupied the house, where Sarah and her brother, William F. Packer, who later became our governor, had been born. Billy Mitchell married Susan Rothrock, daughter of Dr. Rothrock of Beech Creek. In 1899, during the midst of his career, the Mitchells moved from here to Lock Haven. They are buried at Hays-Fearon cemetery.

In 1939 Claude H. Bechdel, son of Edgar and Maud (Heberling) Bechdel, who had previously been associated with the family undertaking business in Blanchard, left his farm in our township to establish the Bechdel Funeral Home in the former Dr. J. E. Tibbins property on Main Street. After Claude's death in 1963 the business was continued by his widow, Dorothy, and son, Bruce, a previously licensed mortician. Bruce's accidental death in 1980 may have marked the end of a very successful, long-standing, family enterprise.

In the early years of the nineteenth century Dr. Alexander Lindsey, likely a son of Revolutionary War soldier, Mungo Lindsey, was practicing medicine in the opposite end of our township. During the years 1806 to 1808 Dr. Joseph Andrews was practicing somewhere in our township. Later for a period of about six years, Mill Hall, then a part of our township, had the services of Dr. Frederick Noah Essick. During the years 1823 and 1824 one part of our township was provided medical service by Dr. Warren Hopkins. Then came Dr. Samuel H. Wallace, who, after about seven years moved his practice to Jersey Shore. The next doctor to display his medical knowledge in the township was Benjamin Berry. During the years from 1836 to 1838 Dr. William Hiborne was providing medical services. In the 1860's and 1870's Isaac Strong, a brother of Solomon Strong, was a patent medicine manufacturer. When Mr. Strong died at Castanea in 1895 he was identified as Dr. Isaac Strong. Whether or not he was already licensed as a doctor while living here is not known. His obituary said that he was buried at Beech Creek. There is no cemetery marker for him or his wife Phoebe.

In 1838 Dr. David W. Roberts established an office in Beech Creek. He later practiced in Eagleville, now Blanchard, where he served as the first postmaster. Next came Dr. William P. Rothrock, who lived at the corner of Harrison and Water Streets in the house later occupied by Dr. W. D. Horne, a chemist. Rothrock's wife, Jane, was a daughter of Robert and Frances (Quigley) Stewart and a sister of George Furst's wife, Eliza. Dr. Rothrock, who moved to Kansas in the 1870's was followed by Doctors Joseph E. Tibbins and Henry H. Mothersbaugh, and by Dr. John M. Bright who left during the next decade.

Joseph E. Tibbins was born to Samuel and Elizabeth (Garbrick) Tibbins in Centre County on November 18, 1847. During the Civil War he was hired to substitute for a draftee, a common and legal practice at that time. The money he received went a long way toward paying for his medical training. Dr. Tibbin's first wife, Emma (Hoy) Tibbins, died January 23, 1872 at age 21, leaving a young son, George Hoy Tibbens. On June 24, 1873 Dr. Tibbins took for his second wife, Emma McDowell, to which marriage was born a son named Perry McDowell Tibbens. Dr. Mothersbaugh, who lived and kept office in the large house next to the former Presbyterian Church building, moved to Altoona at about the same time that the two sons of Dr. Tibbins entered medical careers. The youngest son, Dr. McDowell, as he was familiarly known, died in 1939, before ending his medical career. Dr. George died in 1945 during retirement.

During the middle 1940's Dr. William Dreibelbis came to town, but stayed only a short period before returning to Snow Shoe. Next came Doctors Ronald and Mary (Moss) Price, a husband and wife medical team. The Prices left later to establish a medical clinic in a western state. In 1948 the community gained the services of a physician who was to establish himself permanently. In March of that year Dr. Robert E. Drewery, who had just completed a tour of military duty, following graduation from medical school, came to town, occupying the former Dr. George H. Tibbins home and office. The female co-author of this story recalls that her then five-month old son, David, was one of Dr. Drewery's first patients. The "office call" for David turned out to be a "livingroom call," because Dr. Drewery's office was not yet completed and David was examined in the Drewery living quarters. Most importantly, the diagnosis and treatment brought speedy recovery.

In 1865 Dr. Van Valin opened an office in Beech Creek for the practice of dentistry. Records indicate that he was still here in 1882, but apparently left shortly thereafter.

Development of Industry and Transportation

In the early 1800's acres and acres of virgin, soft wood trees (white pine, yellow pine and hemlock) were waiting to be cut and milled. Many outsiders were attracted to our area by the logging and lumbering industry. Among others the names of James Boyd, Henry James, Samuel Pletcher and Edward Huff appear as Bald Eagle Township sawmill operators during the period from 1801 to 1811. Mr. Boyd's mill was described on the 1808 township assessment list as "at Beech Creek." Mr. Pletcher was of the early Pletcher families of the Howard area. Pletcher family histories show that he lived a short distance below town. Mr. James, who is mentioned elsewhere in this story, lived here until his early death in the 1840's. His widow, Joanna (Fredericks) James, maintained a home for her young children, Elizabeth (later Linn), Clinton and Susannah (later Heverly) until their marriages. In 1880, at age 87, Joanna was living with Levi and Lydia (Linn) Rupert. It appears that Lydia was a granddaughter, but her parents are not positively identified. Prior to the construction of the local canal our exports, which consisted mostly of lumber, had to be hauled by wagon or floated downstream on arks. On March 9, 1771 Bald Eagle Creek had been declared a public highway for arks as far up as Spring Creek. On March 4, 1815 Beech Creek stream was declared a public highway from its mouth up to Eddy Lick. Ark shipments had to be made when the streams were at the proper level. Records show that arks occasionally were snagged and the entire cargo lost.

About the year 1814 Hugh McFadden and Michael Quigley, both of whom married local girls, joined in partnership to build a grist mill at Beech Creek. This has generally been considered as the move that spurred the early development of the town. The McFadden-Quigley venture included the construction of a dam on the creek plus the enlargement and extension of a ditch to form a mill race for water power. In 1815, before the mill was ready, they took advantage of the mill pool's potential by building a carding and fulling mill on the island, just behind the mill. By late 1815 their entire project was completed, the mill was grinding grain, and was placed on the assessment list for the 1816 taxable year. Prior to that time grain had to be hauled long distances for milling. Quigley later purchased McFadden's interest and became sole owner. Many previous accounts of this enterprise have given full credit to Quigley alone. As this paragraph is being written, the original mill building, which had been remodeled several times over the years, still stands, but in a deplorable condition. It is in the middle of town on the south side of Main Street. It may well have reached the point where restoration for historical purposes would not be practicable. In the 1950's, without any prior consultation with local people and apparent owners, our State Department of Forests and Waters bulldozed the old dam in Beech Creek stream from its anchorage. The heavy timbers and planks were allowed to go afloat, possibly creating more liability downstream than the dam was causing here.

By 1832 Joseph M. Smith, who had come from the Philadelphia area, was sending rafts of logs downstream to destinations in the lower Susquehanna Valley. Some of Mr. Smith's logs were used in the construction of a bridge across the Susquehanna at Harrisburg. Mr. Smith married Janetta "Jane" David, a daughter of Isaac David of the pioneering David families. Jane was a granddaughter of Revolutionary War soldier, Daniel David, who died here on April 17, 1832. Mr. Smith died on October 11, 1870 at age 59. On March 25, 1874 his widow, Jane, married John Miller, whose wife, Nancy (Nestlerode) Miller, had died on May 3, 1869. This marriage had problems and by 1880 they were living separately. Jane and her two youngest daughters, Alice and Mattie, were on Water Street in the house later occupied by the Dix Bullock family, and John, with his youngest son, Alfred, were on their farm. To show that these two highly respected families remained on very friendly terms it should be noted that shortly thereafter John Miller's nephew, John B. Miller, married Jane's daughter, Alice. Furthermore Irvin Smith, a grandson of Jane, later married Laura Miller, a granddaughter of John.

Sawmill operators during the period from 1820 to 1850 included George Carr, Daniel Crouse, William Parsons, George Furst, L. G. Andrews, Samuel A. Cook, Housel and Miller, Samuel Saylor, Cline Quigley, Andrew White and Samuel and Johnson Hall. It was during this era that the circular saw replaced the old English-type, gate-mill single saw. During this same period the Nestlerodes were busily engaged in lumbering operations on the other side of the creek in Liberty Township. The name of Samuel Saylor, above, is a reminder that it was he, who, in 1883, undertook the construction of a railroad up Beech Creek valley on the opposite side of the creek. Mr. Saylor's partially completed roadbed and a stone bridgeway are still in evidence at the foot of Big Hill. A more complete account of Mr. Saylor's venture may be found in the Liberty Township Bicentennial book published in 1976.

By 1882 only one of the twelve sawmills that had been on the Beech Creek side of the creek was still in operation. This mill, then owned by Saylor, Day and Morey, stood behind the present home of the Guy Little family at the southern edge of the borough, and was the last of the large mills in the area. The vast supply of valuable timber, much of it "hogged over" and wasted, was coming to an end. Mill operators of a later period included Alpine White, usually referred to as "Piney." George D. Hess, a brother-in-law of Mr. Saylor, and Alvin D. Knecht came together from the Easton area to develop lumbering interests, and each later married local girls. Another lumberman of that period was John C. DeLong, son of Jonathan and Fannie (Bumgardner) DeLong of Liberty Township. John's wife, Temperance, was a daughter of G. Washington Heverly and his second wife, Susannah (James) Heverly. Another was Samuel Gardner, a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Lucas) Gardner. The younger Samuel's daughter, Maggie, became the wife of David M. Packer.

In 1820 at the opposite end of our township, close to or within the present area of Mill Hall, a young English immigrant, who had married about two years earlier, established a fulling and dyeing operation. In 1826, or shortly thereafter, he moved his textile enterprise to the Chatham Run area. Over the years this establishment grew and grew until it became the Woolrich Woolen Mills that we know today. The young English immigrant, as you have likely already guessed, was John Rich.

The Bald Eagle and Spring Creek Navigation Company was organized in 1832 to extend a branch of the West Branch Canal from Lock Haven to Bellefonte. In spite of the hand digging involved this boatway, which passed through the southern edge of our township, was completed to Beech Creek and ready for service in relatively short time. However, the section to Bellefonte was not completed until 1847. The delay was caused by the necessity of constructing twenty-two locks between here and Bellefonte. When finished the canal fully replaced the arks, which carried downstream heavy consignments, such as iron from the furnace at the eastern edge of Howard, then known as Howardville. The canal also replaced much of the horsepack and wagon shipments in the valley. However the bulk of the canal shipments was lumber. A heavy storm in 1865 washed out many of the locks west of Beech Creek. They were never replaced, likely because the Lock Haven and Tyrone Railroad was already providing competition. Incidentally, Canal Lock 24, directly south of Beech Creek, between Bald Eagle

AFTER spending five years in tests and investigation of the problems to be met in modern truck transportation, a truck has been produced which meets the demands made by business men. Even with the advent of the ordinary rear drive truck, it was a recognized fact that the ideal condition to be met, was to drive the machine from all four wheels. Add to this the principle of steering with all four wheels, and you obtain the pinnacle of convenience in moving and handling a load. The shortcomings of the ordinary rear-drive machine are only too well known, for if from any cause you lose the tractive power from one wheel, the load is stalled until that condition is removed.

Creek and the Bald Eagle Valley Railroad was known as the Beech Creek Lock. The walls of this particular lock, in spite of 100-year old trees rooted in their banks, are standing as erect as when built in the early 1830's.

The Lock Haven and Tyrone Railroad Company was organized in 1853 to provide a direct route between these two towns. Later known as the Bald Eagle Valley Railroad, it passed through the southern portion of Beech Creek Township. This line was acquired by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in 1908. Being a part of the bankrupt Penn-Central system it is now operated by Conrail, a government subsidized enterprise. The local division of this railroad began operations in 1862. The section between Bellefonte and Tyrone was opened in 1863.

In 1838 Solomon Strong began the manufacture of fanning mills in a building on Main Street, opposite the present Community Center, formerly the Presbyterian Church. During the 1840's and 1850's Austin Leonard was in the business of making fanning mills. Whether he was operating Mr. Strong's business or had started one of his own is not known. However, a short time later Stillman Keyes, a brother-in-law of Mr. Strong, was the owner and operator of the original Strong factory. Hall's planing mill stood next to the fanning mill building. In those early days grains were hand flailed. Fanning mills separated the chaff from the grains, likely by an air blowing process.

The old covered bridge connecting Beech Creek and Liberty Townships, just south of Beech Creek borough, was built around 1832 as a part of the early Bald Eagle Valley highway. In 1895 a new pier was placed at the center to support a sagging bridge. In 1907 a concrete masonry pier was built to replace the wooden pier, which had been washed out by ice floods. By the 1920's the bridge was sagging on both sides of the middle pier, and was showing the effects of continual failure to replace the roof shingles. In late June, 1927 the bridge collapsed, marking the end of a long period of faithful service.

About the middle of the last century coal deposits were discovered in the area around the northern edge of our township. This event attracted mining developers from England and other immigrants eager to do mining work. Among the families that settled in these mining areas we find the Reavilles, Berges, Whamonds, Llewellyns and Streckes. Railroad facilities for the removal of both coal and lumber were later built into this region from the main tracks on the Susquehanna River. Deposits of iron ore in the same area led to the construction of a furnace near the south fork of Scootac Creek. The lumbering and mining operations in that section were responsible for the development of a number of small communities including Reveltown, Bear Swamp, Peacock and Tangas.

The Miller L. McKean tannery, which was located on the Kessinger lot on Main Street, started operations in 1869. Mr. McKean, a son of Thomas and Julia (Miller) McKean, died suddenly at age 39 on October 4, 1876, just three years after the death of his younger brother, Mark, also a tanner. He left a widow, Ella, and a little daughter, Mabel. It appears that the tannery ceased operations after the death of Thomas McKean in 1879. An artist's sketch of the tannery building, preserved for many years by the late William F. Kessinger, indicated that this was a large operation. Newspaper accounts indicate that the McKean home, now occupied by the family of Clair McKivison, was purchased in 1905 by Barnard Rupert for $560.

In the 1870's Daniel Lose erected an iron foundry along the old mill race directly south of the Presbyterian Church building. He was later joined by John Bickel, who became a partner in this enterprise. Henry Lose, a son of Daniel and his wife, Susan, married Eliza Heverly, a daughter of Washington and Susanna (James) Heverly. Another son, John, married Ann Quigley, a daughter of James and Catharine (Miller) Quigley.

The Beech Creek, Clearfield and Southwestern Railroad, generally known as the Beech Creek Railroad, was built up Beech Creek Valley in the early 1880's. It was financed chiefly by the Vanderbilts and others of New York City. The primary purpose of this road was to transport coal from midwestern parts of the state for locomotive use and to industrial centers farther east. The first train reached Beech Creek on May 15, 1884. Passenger service between Jersey Shore and Beech Creek was inaugurated on July 1 of that year. On that same date the first coal train came from farther west and was weighed, one car at a time, on the Beech Creek scales, then located on the main track. The scales were soon, thereafter, removed to a side track east of town, and later moved to the Jersey Shore area. On February 1, 1885 passenger service was extended to Philipsburg, and by 1886 the tracks were completed to Clearfield. However, it was not until 1893 that the lines reached Mahaffey and Cherry Tree in Cambria County. For the benefit of key employees the company built and maintained two family residences in Beech Creek and one at Mapes Station, a "flag stop" for passenger service. Track maintenance crews were established at Beech Creek and Mapes.

By 1895 the railroad was hauling considerable lumber and was soon to be conveying large quantities of clay and fire bricks. Westbound trains carried farm products, processed foods and merchandise. On November 21, 1895 the Clinton Democrat reported that 6451 cars had passed over the tracks during the week ending on November 16, a typical week. Of this total 3108 loaded cars had been hauled eastward, while 60 loaded cars and 3283 empties were taken westward.

In 1899 the Beech Creek Railroad was leased for a period of 999 years to the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company and became the Beech Creek Division of that system. At that time F. E. Herriman, a former station agent at Beech Creek, who was then located in the Philadelphia headquarters, was placed in charge of all Pennsylvania operations of the New York Central. During the early 1920's, particularly for weighing cars received from, and dispatched to, close-by points, a new set of scales was installed east of town. At about the same time a "Y" was built nearby to allow "pushers" to turn around preparatory to assisting in the pulling of trains up the inclines west of us. Traffic over the major portion of the railroad was discontinued in 1966, when on April 23 of that year the local freight train made its last trip, with its whistle blowing continually as it moved through town. By April of the following year the tracks had been removed all the way from Snow Shoe to Bald Eagle Junction near Mill Hall.

The Beech Creek Railroad Company continued as an entity even beyond the New York Central-Pennsylvania merger, and the later bankruptcy of the resulting Penn Central in June, 1970. However, a Federal judge's ruling in October, 1978, specifying the amount to be paid the Beech Creek shareholders was the official end of the Beech Creek Railroad.

Some time before 1890 George Thomas Furst, son of George and Elizabeth (Stewart) Furst, developed Furst's Climax Healer, commonly called "Tommy Furst's slave." His preparation was kept on hand in almost every area household, especially for its effectiveness in the treatment of boils and other skin eruptions. Mr. Furst, a nephew of Dr. Rothrock, may have had some professional help in developing his product. George S. Furst, son of Thomas and wife, Annie (Fearon) Furst, continued the manufacture and distribution long after his father's death.

In 1892 James Riley DeHaas, a son of Edward and Ann (Connor) DeHaas, set up a plant in Beech Creek for the processing of sorghum syrup. No records can be found regarding the success of this venture. Mr. DeHaas's first wife, Mary, was a daughter of Jacob C. and Isabella (Confer) Bechdel.

In 1893 the wooden bridge (likely a covered bridge) over Beech Creek stream at the western edge of town was replaced by a new iron bridge. This iron bridge was replaced by a larger steel and concrete structure during 1935 and 1936, at which time the highway was rerouted slightly starting at the Beech Creek Hotel. This rerouting placed the new road over a portion of the land once occupied by the "Seven Kitchens."

A newspaper story in 1899 said "there is agitation to replace the old covered bridge at Hubbards." The article referred to the span joining Beech Creek and Liberty Townships on the present Route 364, about three miles upstream from town. However, it was not until September, 1907 that the replacement, a steel structure, which still stands, was completed and inspected by the commissioners of Clinton and Centre Counties.

The Beech Creek news items in an 1899 issue of the Clinton Republican stated that the rumors of Beech Creek getting a fire brick plant were thus far unconfirmed. Nevertheless, at that very time John P. Wynn, a son of James R. and Mary (Bitner) Wynn, already familiar with all phases of fire brick making, was visioning the possibility of mining clay in the nearby mountains, transporting it by dinkey train to Beech Creek, where it would be processed. Thus was born the Pennsylvania Fire Brick Company, which was to be the community's major and only large employer for the next fifty years. By 1909 sixty families living within Beech Creek were being supported by this plant including its mines and narrow-gage railroad. When one considers the total work force and the impact on the local economy, he can clearly see what one man's idea meant to our area. This plant which later became a division of General Refractories Company, maintained a work force of about 200 most of the time, and was one of the last of the fire brick plants in this general area to close down. At the time of his death in 1919 the operation was in charge of Warren R. "Dick" and Thomas Wynn, sons of the founder, and later J. Fred Wynn, son of Dick and his wife, Mable (Robb) Wynn.

The small residence on the south side of Main Street, next to the old grist mill, was originally built to house a milk processing operation. It was later used for offices and then converted into living quarters. The porch on the east side was moved to that location from the front of the building when the highway was widened in 1934.

On May 15, 1915 the Beech Creek Truck and Auto Company filed application with the Commonwealth for a charter. This company, which was capitalized at $100,000 through the sale of common stock, mostly locally, was organized to manufacture four-wheel-drive, four-wheel-steer, heavy-duty trucks. Within a reasonable period the first truck was completed in their new building on Main Street, now occupied by Spotts' store. Demonstrations of its power, traction and maneuverability included ascending the steps of the court house in Lock Haven. At least one additional truck was fully completed, and several others were partially completed before the concern went into bankruptcy. W. Harter Vonada, formerly of Blanchard and now of Bellefonte, has made a very interesting collection of pictures, stock certificates, correspondence and other data related to the company. An account of the entire venture including material and pictures provided by Mr. Vonada, was presented by the Lock Haven Express on November 22, 1966. This followed a less detailed report in the same newspaper on September 28, 1961 from the memory of David M. Packer, then age 94. Mr. Packer had been associated with the company. The Antique Automobile Magazine, in its November-December 1977 issue, presented a very complete story and pictures of the Beech Creek truck. In addition to Mr. Packer, the following men had served on the board of directors: I. J. Rohrbaugh, George F. Hess, Lester H. Stephens, Henry H. Salisbury and Dr. P. McDowell Tibbins.

The Beech Creek Bottling Works, started about 1920 by William P. Morrissey and his son-in-law, Allen W. Gundlach, became a very successful business, with "Whistle," a national brand of orange drink being the prime product. This enterprise was succeeded by the wholesale beverage business of Mr. Gundlach, which is still in operation at an out-of-town location.

During the 1920's a branch of the Howard shirt factory was established in a part of the building of the former Beech Creek Truck and Auto Company on Main Street, commonly referred to then as the old auto factory. After several years this division was consolidated with the main plant at Howard.

Local bus service to Bellefonte and Lock Haven was started in the early 1920's. The franchise for this route was later acquired by the Tices of Howard, who concentrated on the Howard to Lock Haven portion. The franchise was later acquired by the Johnson Motor Bus Company of Woolrich, which later became a division of the Lakes-to-Sea system, now the Continental Trailways. Longer distance service was provided for a number of years by the Golden Arrow lines, which operated between Cumberland, Maryland and Binghampton, New York.

The Reed Candy Factory opened by Edwin R. Reed and family in the 1920's, near to the present post office building, appeared very successful. However, a disastrous fire, mentioned elsewhere, destroyed the business, and rebuilding efforts never materialized beyond the construction of a new masonry foundation, which still stands.

In 1926 our main highway, which then traversed Maple Avenue, was hard surfaced from the western edge of town to Mill Hall, and became a part of State Route 64. This improvement brought a large increase in through traffic, especially because it provided a shortcut for traffic on U.S. Route 220, which then passed through Bellefonte in its course between Milesburg and Mill Hall. Later Route 220 was moved to our valley. East-West Interstate Highway 80, generally known as I-80 or the Shortway, was completed about 1970. This cross-country road runs south of us beyond the Bald Eagle Mountain range. Our approaches are at Milesburg for west-bound driving and south of Mill Hall for eastern destinations. Beginning in 1978 Route 220 traffic between Milesburg and Avis was officially rerouted via a portion of the shortway and a new connector road. This change to divert traffic from our part of the valley has not been as successful as anticipated. Drivers familiar with the two routes prefer our shorter, more level highway, which is now designated as State Route 150.

The Beech Creek Municipal Water System, designed to serve the Beech Creek-Blanchard area, was completed in the late, middle 1930's. Thomas F. Kessinger was primarily responsible for the undertaking. For this project Mr. Kessinger and two other civic-minded citizens, George F. Hess and Dr. P. McDowell Tibbins, appointed by council to become the Water Committee, steered the project to completion. In 1966 with recommendations from the local Planning Commission on file and having awaited for the opportune time, our council made the move to install a sanitary sewage disposal system, another vitally needed project. After more than ten years of above-average rainfall we had become rather complacent, and did not fully prepare for the inevitable. The greater number of users, an increased demand in Blanchard due to a recently installed sewer system, plus additional needs for new and expanding industries were bound to be factors in the early stages of a drought. Fortunately for us, when the 1980 water shortage arrived, a larger pump, placed at the well on Maple Avenue, has so far proved adequate to serve both towns.

The period covered by the late 1960's and early 1970's brought two industries that are flourishing at this time. They are the Armstrong Cork Company and Haven Homes, both located just east of town. Our Armstrong division later completed an expansion program that was accompanied by an increase in the work force. Haven Homes builds readymade homes.

On June 9, 1978 Northeast Rebuilders, a division of Champion Parts Rebuilders, announced plans to consolidate its two Mill Hall units into a new facility to be built adjacent to the Armstrong plant. It was explained that the projected move was primarily contingent upon financial aid from the government. In December, 1978 it was announced that financing had been assured, and groundbreaking was to be scheduled, with completion expected in 1980. As contemplated earlier, the new, modern building for this facility was completed in 1980, and production began about mid-year.

The one industry that should have special recognition is that of farming. Our early settlers, after first providing shelter for their families, began clearing land so as to provide food for the table and feed for the livestock. Among our first settlers who carried the farming tradition from generation to generation were the Fearons, Hayeses, Davids, Packers, Williamses, DeHaases, Millers, McCloskeys and Crispens. Shortly thereafter, in about this order, came the Bitners, Linns, Huffs, Winslows, Wagners, Glossners, Masdens, Liggets, Berrys, Quays, Manns, Reeds, Haagens, Halls, Eyers, Earons, Gummos and Bradys. Following closely were the Mapeses, Lehrs, Myerses, Dickeys, Ruperts, Harlemans, Rowes, Muthlers, Swartzes, Metzgers, Mantles, Kalers, Heimers, Peters, Bickels, Whitefields, and Smiths. From the early days until the present time the workday of a farmer often starts before daylight and ends after darkness comes. What other group of workers displays such industriousness!

Commercial Enterprises

Stores were scarce in our valley as late as the 1831-33 period, at which time a trading post was operating near Howard, then called Howardville. Beech Creek area residents whose names are found in that store's preserved account books include David Rorabaugh, William Hays, Simon Lingle, Michael Quigley, William Fearon, Henry James, Joseph Fearon and Hugh McFadden. John Rich, the founder of Woolrich Woolen Mills, then representing the firm of Rich and McCormick located at the other end of our township, was also listed as a trader. Customers made a wide variety of purchases, including calico, muslin, woven cashmere, silk by the skein, thread, sugar, coffee, alum, cinnamon, indigo by the ounce, castile soap, tobacco by the pound and whiskey at twenty-five cents per half gallon. Hardware items were sled soles, plow shares, razor strops, lumber and nails. In 1832 Paul Lingle delivered to the trading post 498 pounds of beef at 3½ cents per pound and 225 pounds of pork at 5 cents per pound. In 1833 Daniel Nestlerode of Liberty Township bought one German calendar for 12½ cents. During the period of the early 1830's the Howardville Furnace Company, operators of the trading post, was shipping its iron ore down Bald Eagle Creek by arks. Incoming goods came by horsepack and wagon trains. Christopher Heverly, the first Heverly to settle in this general area, had come here as an operator of the overland transportation system. Christopher, a son of S. Henry Everly, was the only one of seven children to affix an "H" to his name.

The mercantile partnership of Landcake and Baker, sometimes listed as Longcake and Baker, began operating in Beech Creek in 1833, shortly after the canal had been opened this far. This firm was still doing business in 1839 and perhaps later, and appears to be of absentee ownership. Whether this firm conducted a general trading post such as the Howardville unit, or dealt in just one commodity such as lumber or grain, has not been ascertained. "Buck" Claflin, mentioned elsewhere as an early schoolteacher, was likely our first real storekeeper. He was succeeded by George Furst, Henry Gast, Cline Quigley and Andrew White, in this order. The location was the house on White Island, just south of the grist mill. White Island, named for Mr. White, was previously called Nestlerode Island. White was a son-in-law of Michael Quigley. Mr. Furst later constructed a large two-story brick store building on Main Street. Some time later Mr. Furst's son-in-law, George D. Hess, became a partner in the business, and afterwards full owner. Mr. Hess was succeeded by his son, George F. Hess, whose death in 1959 brought an end to this long-standing family enterprise. The building still stands and is in fairly good condition for its age.

Other merchants in the middle to late 1800's were: Silas Hess and Salathial Mobley, each of whom was married to a daughter of Michael Quigley, Silas to Frances, and Salathial to Mary; Henry Berry, whose store building contained his shoe repair shop; and brothers, Charles and Erastus Cade, Civil War veterans who had come from Haines Township in Centre County and married local girls. Charles married Mary Elizabeth Hall, a daughter of Joseph and Temperance (Sterling) Hall, and Erastus married Harriet Bitner, a daughter of Abraham and Mary (Leathers) Bitner. It is interesting to note that William E. Beschler, a great grandson of Joseph and Temperance Hall, became a twentieth century storekeeper. Additional merchants prior to 1900 included: John McGhee and the Ligget Brothers, who had come from Liberty Township; Jesse S. Hall, son of Samuel and Sarah (McCloskey) Hall; George W. Williams, the son of George Q. and Elizabeth (Bollinger) Williams and the husband of Kate Hubbard, a daughter of Joseph Hubbard and his first wife, Harriet (Weaver) Hubbard; Edward Mobley, the son of Salathial, and the husband of Jesse Hall's sister, Sarah. Others were: James Clark, a son of William and Sarah (Hays) Clark, whose store building on the high creek bank on upper Water Street is now a family residence; and Edward K. Parsons, who married Virginia, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (James) Linn, and later moved to Lock Haven. The Cade brothers also left town with Erastus finally settling at Damascus in Wayne County.

The Ligget store building had been erected at the corner of Main and Grant Streets. This building later housed many commercial enterprises before being converted to serve as the first home of the Beech Creek National Bank. Recent conversion by William B. Kessinger turned this structure into an apartment house. The Williams store building on Locust Street was later used as a store by brothers-in-law, Lester Stephens and William Smith, followed by Mr. Stephens and another brother-in-law, Mr. Horton, and still later by Mr. Stephens alone, who continued the business for many years. During these same years the south side of this same building was used for various types of business by Alec Shoemaker, James Pollock, Eugene and Frank Johnson,

The bank's first home.

Timothy McCarthy and his daughter, Bertha, Charles W. Miller, Annabelle McKean and others. It was later used as living quarters. Mr. Stephens had come from New York state and married Annie Smith, a daughter of Temple and Eliza J. (Gardner) Smith; William Smith was a brother of Annie. Mr. McCarthy, the father-in-law of Mr. Miller, was the son of Isaiah and Julia (Hurley) McCarthy.

Hastings was located at the point of the Ligget Triangle at the end of Grant Street. This small two-story building had been moved to that location in 1899 to make room for a house being built on Main Street by James Metzger. The store of John W. Waite in part of his home on Main Street was continued for many years, after which his son, John Raymond "Onnie" Waite, opened a small restaurant and confectionery store. A later conversion of this building by Harold Packer led to the pizza shop that exists today. For a short period starting in April, 1905 Mr. Waite leased his store to Curtis Bechdel and moved temporarily to Tyrone.

A drug store was opened by Mrs. Clara (Kelly) Tibbins, a licensed pharmacist and wife of Dr. George H. Tibbins, in the section of the Ligget cluster that still stands. It was moved to the Ligget building on Main Street before being closed.

Jerry Shearer once conducted a small store on Vesper Street in the former home of his wife's parents, George and Isabelle (Leonard) Shearer. This building is now occupied by the Harris Rupert family. Isabelle Shearer was a daughter of Austin Leonard, an early local postmaster, and his first wife, Julia Ann (Packer) Leonard. Jerry Shearer was one of two children of Thomas and Margaret Shearer. The other was Franklin, familiarly known as "Sheriff" Shearer. An 1899 newspaper story told that Albert Bergner was closing his Beech Creek store and opening a boarding house and store at Monument Run, where timber operations were still flourishing, but more importantly, a new fire brick plant was already under construction at that place. In 1870, at age 10, Mr. Bergner had been living with the David and Isabella (Reed) Mapes family in Beech Creek Township. He later married Annie E., a daughter of Casper and Philomena (Eckert) Peters.

After being burned out by the disastrous Main Street fire of 1903, Edward Sykes opened a store on Locust Street in the present tavern building. He was followed at this location by his brother, Frank, who was later succeeded by his nephew, Milton, oldest son of Edward. Meantime another Frank Sykes, a cousin of Edward and Frank, conducted for several years a general store in the brick building at the corner of Main and Grant Streets. Other merchants of that period were Adam Grenninger, who occupied several different locations, and B. Frank Thompson, whose son, Guy, married Ada Packer, daughter of George and Maria (Burd) Packer. In the early 1920's Shetler's Cash Grocery was opened in the building directly across from the present post office building. This business was continued by Beschler and Miller, Mr. Beschler alone, Robert E. Murray and Ted Hunter, in this order.

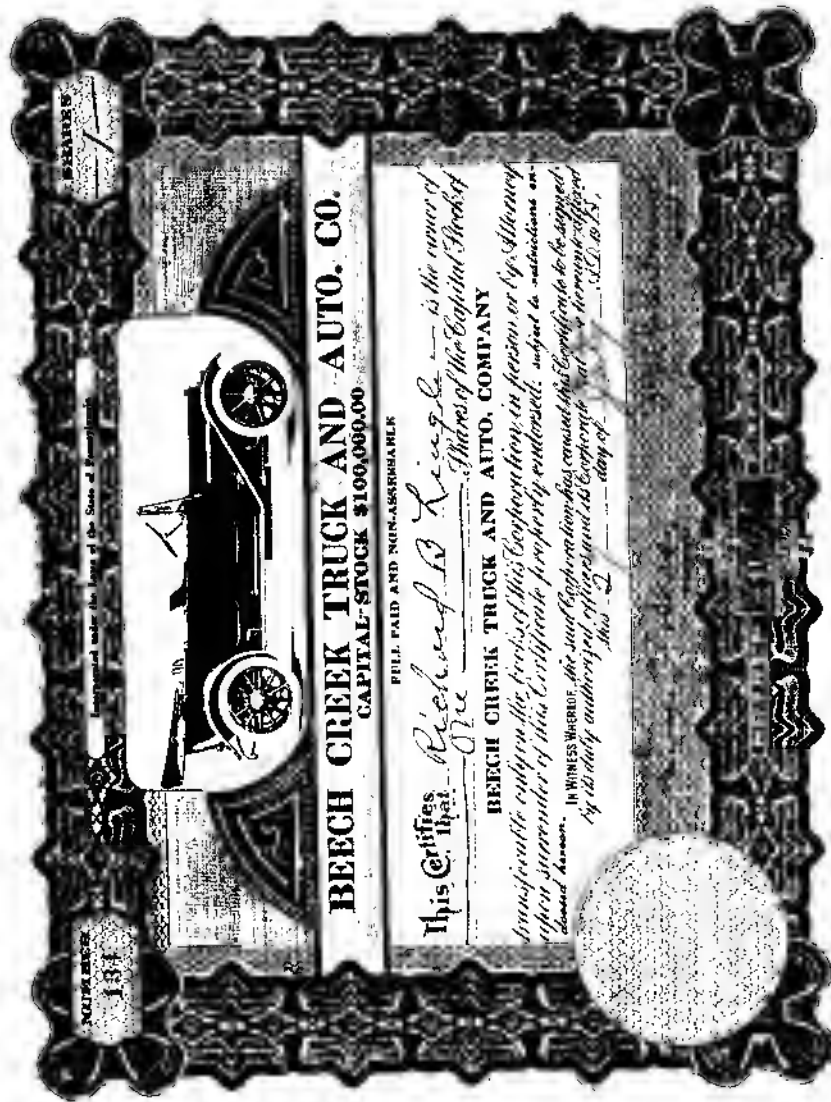

The present Spotts IGA market, an outgrowth of the former Dunlap farm supply and hardware center in the former auto factory building on Main Street, is flourishing as a modern, self-service, grocery and hardware outlet. Recently this firm added a line of major electrical appliances. The Beech Creek Egg Barn, started originally in the old brick plant building as an industrial-agricultural venture in the production and wholesale of poultry, later specialized in producing and marketing eggs. Managed by Bruce Miller this commercial enterprise is now devoted particularly to the retail of fresh eggs. A nearby meat market is operated by Charles "Mike" Kitchen. In addition to those already mentioned retail or eating places have been conducted by J. W. Merrey, Thomas Burke, The Morrissey family, the McKean family, William Fudge, Maud (Rupert) Smith, Anna (Dickey) Mann, Genevieve (Lytle) Bitner O'Donnell, Fred and Beatrice Sherman, William and Vivian Kunes, Edward Scantlin and likely many others.

Around 1890 a large roller skating rink was built on east Main Street. When the building was later dismantled the lumber was reused by Dr. J. E. Tibbins in the construction of three houses in a row on the front of the same lot. Projecting from the roof of each house was a steeple-shaped dormer, which not only gave additional space and light to the attic area, but also provided a unique symmetrical appearance. One of these houses became the home and office of Dr. George H. Tibbins and presently serves the same purposes for Dr. Robert E. Drewery.

Efforts to learn when and by whom the Beech Creek Hotel was built have been unsuccessful. Proprietors in the years prior to its acquisition by W. P. Morrissey around 1919 have been given as: Cline Quigley, who sold to Peter Gould in 1895; John P. DeHaas, a son of John P. and Susan (Bechdel) DeHaas, who took over in 1905; and Jacob Basinger, who left when the prohibition law took effect. After coal became an important fuel for house-heating, a coal tipple, accessible from the railroad, was built along the tracks just west of Locust Street by Harry W. Packer. Later another tipple was erected by George D. Hess and Son at a point east of Locust Street. Local deliveries were made by horse and wagon. The exact date of the inauguration of telephone service in our area has not been verified. However, by 1909 we were being served by both the Bell and the Commercial companies. This double service continued until the 1920's, when Bell withdrew from the area. At about that same time the Commercial lines became the Bald Eagle Telephone Company, and later the United Telephone Company.

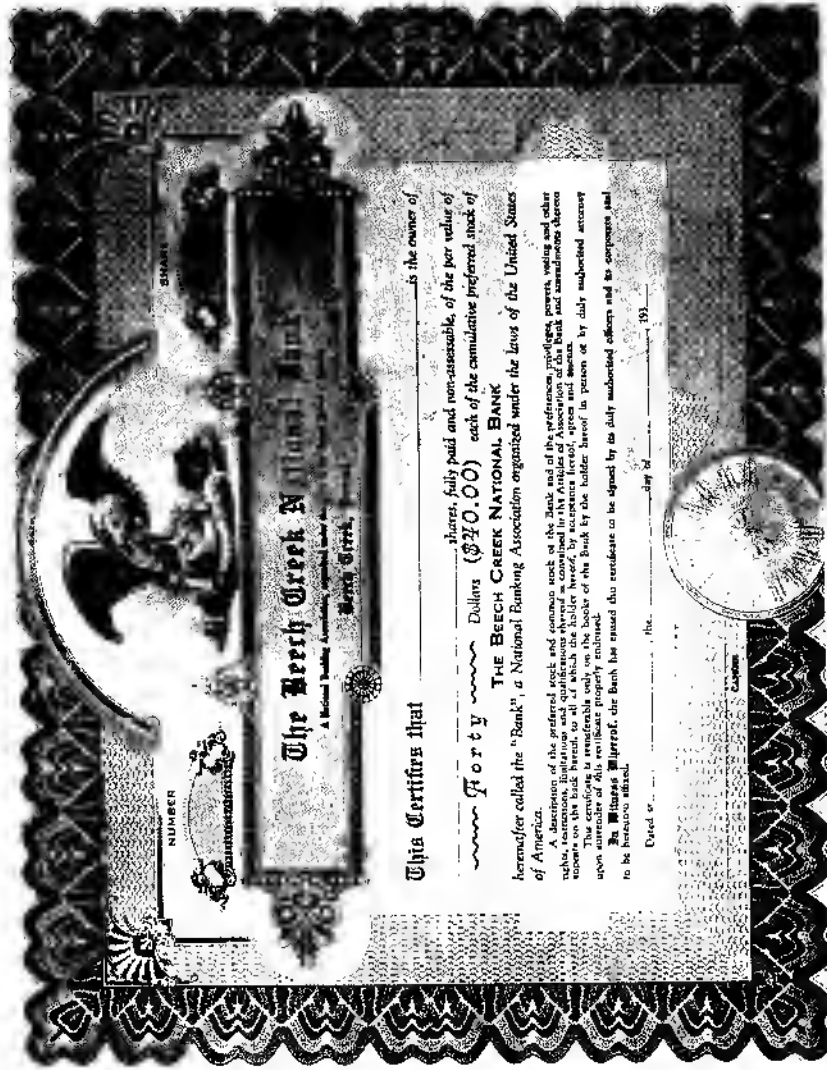

In 1921, recognizing the need for such an institution, Dr. P. McDowell Tibbins took steps to establish the Beech Creek State Bank, now the Beech Creek National Bank. Mr. Tibbins became the first president and his fellow directors were: Dr. George H. Tibbins, a brother; William P. Morrissey, who, some years earlier, had married a local girl; John H. Hunter, son of James and Clara (Nestlerode) Hunter; Elmer Peters, son of Casper and Phoebe (Eckert) Peters; Shuman S. Williams, son of Isaac Williams and his second wife, Catharine (Holter) Williams; J. Irvin Wagner, son of George and Susan (Rorabaugh) Wagner; Albert Bergner, whose wife was a sister of Elmer Peters; and Stewart Williams, a Clearfield County native and the mine superintendent at Monument. The first cashier was David G. Meek, who had come from Juniata. Subsequent cashiers were Loudon Brungard, whose first wife was Matilda Metzger, daughter of James and Ella (Martin) Metzger, and J. Aaron Haugh, a Mill Hall native who had married Olive Peters of Beech Creek. The present cashier is D. William Selfe, who was raised in the Lock Haven area. The modern bank building on East Main Street, which includes a drive-in facility, has undergone two major expansions since it was constructed in 1967.

The first garage and service station was opened by Thomas F. Kessinger, a son of William F. and Martha (Lucas) Kessinger. Later operators of auto repair services included Clyde Lewis, who stayed only several years; William B. Cook, son of Charles and Dora (Bechdel) Cook; George Bitner, son of George and Elizabeth (DeLong) Bitner; Robert Dunlap, son of Thomas P. and Eva (Askey) Dunlap; and Fred Sherman, whose combination of garage, restaurant and trailer court was purchased and further developed by Edward W. Scantlin, the present owner. Other current garage operators are Malcolm and Thomas Myers, sons of Hiram and Tacie (Scantlin) Myers and Fred Gundlach, son of Allen W. and Ruth (Morrissey) Gundlach.

According to a newspaper account in 1898 Beech Creek Council placed two new street lamps, increasing the total to 15. One was placed near the railroad station with the other placed on Mill Street (now Maple Avenue) in front of the residence of Johnson Gardner, now the home of William Kunes. Nothing was said of the twice-daily task of caring for each lamp. In 1920 State Center Electric Company extended their lines from Milesburg to our community. When the current was turned on in early December F. I. Thompson, with the aid of B. Frank Bowers, local jack-of-all-trades, had many of the homes wired and ready. The street lights were lighted for the first time on Saturday night, November 17, 1921. Our producer later became Keystone Power Company, and still later West Penn Power Company. During those early years power interruptions were so frequent that kerosene lamps and candles had to be kept in readiness. In fact the company was dubbed by some as "The Sunshine Power Company." They joked, "We have light while the sun shines." At that time the minimum monthly billing was one dollar even though a family may have used less than the maximum of ten KWH's allowed for the minimum charge. Today most families use more than that in a half day.

The electrical appliance and bottled gas business of William B. Kesinger was first established in a new storeroom adjacent to the site of the present bank building. This business was later moved to its present location in the former, masonry-constructed, Kesinger garage building in the heart of town. An electrical appliance store was conducted for a number of years by Blaine W. Kunes in a part of his building on Locust Street. The local television cable system was installed by a developer living in Williamsport. Financial troubles forced the sale of the local network, which was purchased by Mr. Kunes. Improvements and extensions made by Mr. Kunes and his son, Blaine F. Kunes, the present manager, turned this undertaking into a viable enterprise.

At one time at least eight local stores had show cases fully stocked with penny candy, some pieces weighing an ounce or more. The youngster with a penny to spend had the choice of a tootsie roll, a peanut bolster, a jaw breaker, a lolly pop, or any one of about twenty additional varieties. If shopping at Waite's store he could slip his penny into the slot of an uncommon-type machine, pull the lever, and receive a heaping handful of Spanish peanuts or, if his appetite called for it, he could spend his penny for a dried herring, commonly called a "blind robin." If so inclined one could insert the penny in the Zeno chewing gum machine at Stephens's store and perchance get a stick of gum with a red wrapper. This particular wrapper entitled the lucky person to a free pack of gum. If after store hours, the penny could be used at the outdoor gum vending machine at the McKean pool room on Main Street.

Our first beauty parlor was opened by Jane Linn, a daughter of Edward and Minnie (Furl) Linn, and now the wife of Sydney Tressler. Other beauticians of an earlier day included Ann (Minier) Barner, wife of Russell Barner, the insurance agent, and Ann Yeager, a former schoolteacher and the wife of Franklin "Sonny" Yeager. The following opened shops in more recent years: Catharine (Ponte) Johnson, wife of Joseph Johnson, the rural mail carrier; Eileen (Hovan) Gardner Mace, a daughter of John and Olive (Gardner) Hovan; and Trenelva (Confer) Peters, the daughter of Clyde and Mildred (Woodring) Confer, and wife of McDowell Peters.

Events, Disasters and Anecdotes

During the November, 1818 term of Centre County court James Monks, a native of Potter Township, and a son of William Monks, was tried for the murder of Reuben Guild, which had occurred on November 16 of the previous year. On Saturday, January 23, 1819 he was hanged in the yard of our county jail at Bellefonte while William Armor, a fifer in the War of 1812, played "Mary's Dream" beneath the gallows. Monks, himself, had requested this particular tune rather than the customary "Dead March." Even though the murder occurred on Marsh Creek in that part of Howard Township that later became Liberty Township, the story of this murder has always been associated with local history, because Monks had been employed here at the Henry James sawmill. It should be noted that previous local accounts had erroneously listed Guild as Giles. Mr. Monks had set out on foot for a visit in Clearfield County. When he returned on Sunday evening he was riding a horse equipped with attractive saddle and bridle, and he was sporting a new watch. When the murder of Guild was reported all suspicion fell on Monks. On a dark, rainy night Sheriff William Alexander came to Marsh Creek, arrested Monks, and, with no assistance took his prisoner to Bellefonte each riding a horse. Jurors for the trial included Absalom Ligget and Frederick Schenck, and witnesses were Mr. James, William Gardner, John Ligget, John Confer, Michael Meese, John Wantz, Samuel Gardner and Ephraim Green Gardner, all from this general area.

Following the guilty verdict Monks confessed and explained in some detail his cowardly act of shooting Guild in the back after they had met on a lonely road. Upon completing a brief conversation each had started toward his destination when Monks, seized by what he, himself, described as an uncontrollable impulse, suddenly grabbed his gun, wheeled around, pointed at Guild and pulled the trigger. When the 1820 census was taken, Mary Monks, widow of the murderer, and her two daughters, both under age 10, were still living in Liberty Township. Incidentally some of our present-day James, Heverly and Linn families descend from Mr. James, the sawmill operator. While awaiting his execution, the first in Centre County following its incorporation nineteen years earlier, Monks is credited with writing a thirteen-verse poem. The poem describes events that led to the murder, the actual murder and his later actions and feelings. He also absolves Andrew Allison, who was still accused of the murder, by some, even after Monks was convicted. A copy of the poem is in possession of the authors.

The following story, the authenticity of which cannot now be verified, has been related many times by descendants of Michael and Zylphia (Winslow) Miller. They, with their six children, four boys and two girls, lived on a farm northeast of town at the location of the present home of William Karch. About the year 1859 Mr. Miller became ill and a Beech Creek doctor, who lived on upper Water Street was summoned. The doctor thoroughly examined the patient and left a supply of medicine. About an hour later the doctor came rushing back, his horse and buggy moving at top speed. He hurriedly announced, "Do not give that medicine; I made a mistake." The family immediately responded, "We already gave it to him, and he's dead!" The widow Miller later married George Ruple, a native of New Jersey. In 1863 the Ruples had a son, whom they named for Civil War general, George B. McClellan. Zylphia got another shock from the announcement that her son, Eli, was killed in the Battle of Gettysburg. The birth in June 1877 of her son, William, when she was fifty-five, featured another major event in the life of Mrs. Ruple.

Our area was not immune to the smallpox epidemic that occurred during the Winter of 1862-63. A well-preserved letter written on March 1, 1863 by a local woman to her son who was serving in the Civil War, said in part, "Mrs. Mason, old Mr. Mason's woman, had smallpox about four weeks ago, and Dr. Rothrock was away. They sent for Mr. Leonard, who pronounced it smallpox. Then some of the neighbors got it, and also Mr. and Mrs. John Kunes and Mrs. Huff. Mrs. John Bridgens has been exposed to it." Mrs. Bridgens, mentioned here, was Mary Emma, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kunes. If she contracted the disease, she most certainly recovered, because she lived until 1926. However, Mr. Kunes died in August of that year, likely from the effects of the disease, and Mr. Bridgens's younger brother, Marcus, and a niece, Lena Mae Bonsell, died at that time.

In a letter dated March 29 the above mother wrote, "If you come home I advise you not to stop at Milton or Williamsport on account of smallpox." Earlier, on January 6, this same mother had written, "The smallpox is in Eagleville again so I don't like to go to church." Records show that two weeks afterward John and Hannah (Longshore) Ligget lost their only son, John R., age four; the following week they lost their only daughter, Laura, age two. Smallpox was likely the cause. The Liggets had built and lived for many years in the house on Water Street next to Dr. Rothrock. This house is presently occupied by Pauline (Shuttleworth) Masden, widow of LeRoy. Mr. Ligget, who was a long-time local justice of the peace, built the cluster of buildings that stood in the triangle across from the present post office. The squire, a native of Liberty Township, died in 1914, three years after the death of his wife, a native of Nashville, Ohio. He willed the triangle properties to his favorite lodge, The Improved Order of Red Men. His death brought an end in this area of a name that had been very popular ever since the first Liggets came from Virginia many years earlier, accompanied by some of their slaves. It should be mentioned that at least one Ligget, Fisher, volunteered and fought to free all slaves.

Records reveal that some sort of epidemic may have plagued our area a few years earlier. In 1855 Richard and Agnes (Nancarrow) Gummo, natives of England, lost four children, ages four to ten, within a span of two weeks. These deaths followed the loss of a child two years earlier. The Gummo farm was on the dividing line between Beech Creek and Bald Eagle Townships, with the house being in one township and the barn in the other. The boundary actually passed through the center of their spring, permitting one to obtain a good cold drink from whichever township he chose.

Rebecca (Clark) Winslow died at age 40 on November 2, 1877, and was buried at the Blanchard Church of Christ cemetery beside her husband John, who had died more than two years earlier. On December 7, 1877 the Democratic Watchman, a Bellefonte newspaper, carried an account written at Beech Creek, regarding the raising of the body of Mrs. Winslow. An autopsy had been ordered by Clinton County officials because of the suspicion that an illegal operation may have caused her death. The re-digging was under the supervision of county officials, who, late in the morning, retired to the Eagleville Hotel to mark time and have lunch while the grave diggers were completing their task. Around noon time the diggers surfaced the body and left for their homes, leaving the coffin unattended. When the officials returned to claim the body they discovered that several curious boys had come upon the scene and made their own inspection. A later edition of the same newspaper carried an account of a guilty verdict against an area doctor for an illegal operation. The verdict was being appealed by the doctor, who seemed to have the support of a large number of citizens. No effort was made by the authors of this history to determine if the two incidents had any connection.

Daniel B. Malone, a grandson of Revolutionary War soldier, Richard Malone, and, himself, a Civil War veteran, lived with his third wife, Ruth (Yarnell) Zimmerman Malone, just south of the old crossroads in the house now occupied by the Frank Meskell family. One day in late October, 1898 Joseph W. Merrey, who lived on Maple Avenue, hitched his team to the family carriage and was about to climb inside when the horses became very frightened, possibly by a passing NYC train. They suddenly took off down the road at high speed leaving Mr. Merrey behind. When reaching the crossroads they turned toward Bald Eagle Creek, and were immediately spied by Mr. Malone, who immediately sensed what had happened and decided to do something. While running through the garden area at the south side of his house to reach the road and stop or head off the horses, Mr. Malone fell to the ground, and consequently the horses kept running. After crossing the bridge the team and a PRR train reached the crossing at exactly the same time. Both horses were killed and the carriage was destroyed. However, the most unfortunate part of the whole episode is the fact that Mr. Malone had suffered a heart attack and died on the spot where he fell.

Census records for the year 1810 indicate that Mathias Richards had died about the year 1807 and his widow, Elizabeth, was in charge of their combined farm and distillery operation. Assessment records of that period reveal additional and interesting information. In 1804 Mr. Richards had one slave. At the time of his death he had three slaves. By 1811 Mrs. Richards had reduced the slave holdings to one female valued at forty dollars, which required a tax payment of twenty cents. Previously printed historical accounts tell that in 1820 the wife of Thomas Holland (Hollen) disappeared from their farm home near the head of Masden Hollow, and that she was never heard from again. Records show that Nancy, a later wife of Mr. Holland, died in 1845 at age fifty-six, and there may have been at least one subsequent wife.

As stated elsewhere Rebecca Clark, wife of James Clark, was a daughter of Nicholas and Elizabeth (Moore) Quigley. Careful research indicates that Rebecca had a sister, Margaret, the wife of William Council, who was born locally to John and Rhoda (David) Council on September 30, 1815. Other children of Nicholas Quigley were Ellen Eliza, who married George Wensel and James Quigley, who married Catharine Miller, and later Hannah Rutland, who still later became the third wife of Levi Rupert. On May 18, 1861 James Clark and William Council were hunting in the mountains north of town. Mr. Clark's gun was accidentally discharged killing Council instantly. In addition to his wife, Margaret, Mr. Council was survived by sons, Martin, Stewart, Irvin Q. and George. At that particular time Mr. Clark's own family was complete except for his son, James Monroe Clark, born July 29 of that same year.

In the Fall of 1912 James Scott DeHaas, son of Charles Jacob and Mary (Gardner) DeHaas, was enjoying his first year of big game hunting at Beech Creek. Mistaken for a bear the fourteen-year-old boy was shot and killed at Jose Valley, north of town. James Scott, a grandson of James Riley DeHaas and his first wife, Mary (Bechdel) DeHaas, and of Scott and Lydia (Graham) Gardner, carried the names of both his grandfathers. A near-parallel of this accident in 1917 took the life of Edward Johnson, age 43, son of William and Emily (Mapes) Johnson. Grandparents were Nathan Johnson and his first wife, Rebecca (Reeder) Johnson, and Edward and Eliza (Locke) Mapes. Funeral services for young DeHaas and Mr. Johnson, both then out-of-town residents, were held locally and each was buried at Hays-Fearon cemetery among earlier ancestors.

As late as 1863 our ancestors were still living by rather primitive methods. A letter written from a local farm home that year said in part, "I am finishing this letter by candlelight." This, of course, did not imply that the electricity had been shut off, or even that the kerosene supply had been exhausted. It simply meant that darkness had overtaken the writer and she was finishing the letter by their most common method of illumination.

The Evan and Phoebe Ashton family left Beech Creek very hurriedly in March, 1863. One report said, "they disappeared like a skiff of snow at harvest time with a large sum of money, possibly twelve to fifteen thousand dollars, that belonged to Mr. Ashton's employer, Buckley, Saylor and Company."

A fire that destroyed Keyes Fanning Mill factory and Halls Planing Mill in 1885 may have been our worst ever. A pumper had been hurriedly sent from Lock Haven on a railroad flat car. In descending a ramp at the local station the pumper went out of control, killing one man and critically injuring two others. Whether the two injured men survived was not known when the story was published in the Philadelphia Times on April 29 of that year.

A Main Street fire in 1889 burned the post office and Albert Bergner's store. A fire in January, 1899 burned Henry Berry's shoe shop and Richard Berryhill's storeroom. At 2 a.m. on January 4, 1903 a fire broke out in the Edward Sykes store on Main Street. In addition to the Sykes store, a former Keyes building, it burned the barber shop of Al Williams, the Williams store building, the McKean building and John McGhee's store and tenant house. Mr. Sykes, who then established his store on Vesper Street was followed at that location by his brother, Frank, and later his son, Milton, whose business was destroyed by fire around 1930.

At about ten o'clock on an Autumn morning in 1925 the female members of the Edwin R. Reed family, living at the corner on Main and Grant Streets, came running into their front yard, wringing their hands and screaming for help. Clouds of smoke were pouring from the Reed Candy Factory at the rear of their lot. Within about twenty minutes the Mill Hall fire truck rolled into town and was flagged-down at Grant Street by William Fudge waving his handkerchief. The hose was dropped and the pumper proceeded to the grist mill bridge and went into action. However, it was too late to save any part of the building or its contents, which included two trucks. Nevertheless, the barns on the adjoining properties of Lyle McKean and John Earon were saved.

One person died and seventeen were left homeless as the result of an early morning fire at the eastern edge of town on December 10, 1937. A. Dale Baney succumbed to burns caused by the blaze, which destroyed the Baney and Ben Bitner homes. These houses were the inner two of a row of four houses, familiarly known in an earlier day as the Joe Masden properties.

Over the years there has been a noticeable change in the method of selecting names for babies. At one time it was not uncommon to assign the newborn the exact same name of a deceased older brother or sister. There were two instances of this in the family of Joseph M. and Janetta (David) Smith. Many girls received the same name as their mother. In contrast to today our forerunners selected more names from among ancestors and relatives, more from the Bible, more from U.S. presidents and army generals, and more from ministers of the gospel. Girls often received such names as Love, Charity, Gladness, True, Silence, and Temperance. In one noticeable case a girl was named Alabama. Two children were found with the name Orange. A daughter born to James and Ellen (Baird) David on July 4, 1850 was named Independence Virginia. Another very appropriate name was that of Centennial Haagen, born to John and Fayette (Brungard) Haagen in the year 1876. We must remember that in those days there were no movie and TV personalities, and very few sports stars and glamour magazines to provide a source of names.

In 1889 John Mapes, a son of Edward and Eliza (Locke) Mapes, his wife, Mary J. (Clark) Mapes, the daughter of John T. and Mary (Boone) Clark, and their children boarded their houseboat for a new home elsewhere. The boat, which had been in readiness awaiting high water, carried their necessary belongings, including a cow. Witnesses to the boat as it moved past Beech Creek always retained a memory of the cow peering through the stable door at the rear. The Mapes family floated to the Chesapeake Bay and eventually settled in North Carolina.

In January, 1905 Samuel Bitner, young son of Oliver and Cora (Mortimer) Bitner, had both legs cut off near the hips by an NYC freight train. Sammy was "cuffing" a ride when his footing slipped, landing him on the track beneath the wheels. In March of that year Sammy was returned to his home from the Lock Haven Hospital.

An incident that took place in a deep well at the Samuel Gardner residence on upper Water Street on Monday, July 10, 1911 brought a Carnegie Medal to a Beech Creek man. The life of a Blanchard well digger, Lemuel Clark, was saved by the heroism of Frank A. Kunes, a son of Samuel H. and Clarissa (Masden) Kunes, who lived nearby. Mr. Kunes, after being alerted by his neighbor, Mrs. Mae (McCarthy) Miller, hurried to the scene and succeeded in doing what several others had attempted, but failed. He quickly descended into the well, fastened a rope around the unconscious body of Mr. Clark, and taking advantage of his own robust physique, hoisted Clark to the surface. The task of Mr. Kunes was compounded by the fact that he, too, was somewhat overcome by the lack of oxygen deep in the well. Immediate treatment by a doctor and another medically trained man standing by led to the complete recovery of Mr. Clark. In 1933, at age 74, and still in apparent good health, Mr. Kunes lost his own life after being struck by an automobile on the main street in Lock Haven. He had just come from Avis where he had witnessed another win by his hometown baseball team.

In 1890 James R. Walz, a local bridge worker, lost his life when a passing train caused supporting timbers to be dislodged. James was a son of John G. Walz, a local saddler and a brother of Warren Walz, a local tailor. He left a widow and two young children. In a bridge accident in 1906 James A. Hunter, age 46, a highly-skilled structural steel worker who lived nearby in Liberty Township, lost his life. He was survived by his widow, Clara (Nestlerode) Hunter and a young family. A son of John and Frederica (Smith) Hunter, he had grown up in our Beech Creek area.

In August, 1920 Everett Hall Packer, a son of Asher and Nancy (Hall) Packer, lost his life in a fall from the Beech Creek school building. Mr. Packer, who was doing work on the steeple, lost his footing and landed on the stone walk below. A short time before his fall Packer had agreed with a niece living closeby that it was a dangerous place for a seventy-four-year-old man to be working. He explained, however, that he needed the money. Everett and his wife, Esther, a daughter of Jesse Gladfelter and his second wife, Esther (Keister) Gladfelter, are buried at the Church of Christ cemetery in unmarked graves.

On May 26, 1916 a tragic accident occurred at the Pennsylvania Railroad crossing adjacent to the Beech Creek station. Simeon Maines, the station agent, was driving his 1910 model Maxwell touring car and had reached the crossing just ahead of the fast moving flyer, but his car stalled on the track. The car was completely demolished and Maines was instantly killed. Charles A. Hayes of Howard, who was riding with Mr. Maines, jumped clear of the vehicle in time to escape injury. Mr. Maines, who was born June 27, 1882 in Clearfield County, left a widow, the former Clara Batschelet, and six children counting one that was born several months later. For many years afterward the mangled automobile lay in public view at the old auto factory on Main Street. Mr. Hayes later married Lola Bitner, daughter of George and Elizabeth (DeLong) Bitner, and lived here. In early 1923 Hayes had another very narrow escape. While lending his assistance at a burning double house on Maple Avenue a brick fell from a chimney and struck him on the forehead. Fortunately it was a glancing blow, but it left a scar that Mr. Hayes carried the rest of his life. This particular house was the home of the families of Harry and Mary (Smith) Masden and Luther and Mabel (Boone) Glossner.

On an afternoon in September, 1913 Leonard James McGhee, a son of Oscar and Jemima (Haagen) McGhee, was killed by a train. Young McGhee had walked up the railroad track from his farm home and crossed the "iron bridge" over Bald Eagle Creek. His mission was to assist his younger sister, Sarah, a pupil at Haagen School, in crossing the bridge, a twice-daily chore of the sixteen-year-old boy. While sitting in waiting near the track, Leonard apparently fell asleep. When aroused by the oncoming "Chemung," a special private passenger train, he raised his head, which was struck. Incidentally, in 1978 the previously abandoned iron bridge was purchased by Howard McGhee, son of Leonard's brother Chester, and the present occupant of the McGhee farm house.

An early drowning was that of Peter Uhl, age 29, who drowned in Beech Creek on June 13, 1864. He was a son of Peter Uhl of Marsh Creek. Another drowning in 1864 took the life of four-year-old George Boyd Quigley. He was the son of James and Catharine (Miller) Quigley. It was his grandfather, Michael Miller, who had died five years before from having been given the wrong medicine by his doctor. Little Boyd had been named for his uncle George Boyd Quigley, who, with his wife, Matilda, later lived at the location of the Wesleyan Church parsonage. Incidentally, the elder Boyd, who should have been mentioned in an earlier paragraph as an additional son of Nicholas and Eliza, had another nephew as a namesake. He was George Boyd Wensel, son of George and Ellen Eliza (Quigley) Wensel. The Wensel boy died at age thirteen in 1863, likely of smallpox. This particular disease is suggested because our area had a serious epidemic of the pox at that time. Furthermore, the Wensels were close neighbors of the Liggets who had lost two children several weeks earlier.

In August, 1902 Floyd Swartz, five-year-old son of Marion and Laura Ann (Jonas) Swartz, drowned in Beech Creek stream near his home. In the Summer of 1936 Billy Trept of Shamokin, young grandson of Mrs. Clara (Knarr) Hevner, drowned at the old swimming hole near the mouth of Beech Creek. On August 27, 1963 a double drowning near the Beech Creek bridge took the lives of two young boys; they were Billy Merrill, age 9, son of Rev. and Mrs. William R. Merrill, and Billy's cousin, Dale Horton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Horton of Sayre.

James "Peg" Rupert, son of Theodore and Elizabeth (Rine) Rupert, had survived several encounters with freight trains before being killed by an automobile. The results of Peg's dealings with trains ranged from slight injuries to loss of a leg. Leonard Council, son of Warren and Alice (James) Council, was much less fortunate, having been killed in his first encounter with a train. Leonard, generally known at "Yardley," had almost reached his destination when struck. In 1919 Jesse Rupert, age 18, son of Harry and Susan (Nestlerode) Rupert, was killed when he attempted a freight train ride from Mill Hall. In 1935 Clarence "Miley" Coffey was killed by a freight train. Mr. Coffey left a widow, Amanda (Casher) Coffey and a young family.

On April 15, 1939, just two days short of his forty-seventh birthday, Walter Glock lost his life when his truck was struck by a train at Mill Hall. Walter, a son of Conrad and Fannie (Miller) Glock, left a widow, the former Ellen DeLong and a young son, Clair. On November 25, 1944 Eva (Streck) Renninger, a daughter of John and Sarah (Llewellyn) Streck, was killed while walking along the track near her home. Eva's husband, Robert, while a locomotive engineer, had lost a leg in a train wreck. In 1901 David Miller, a railroad employee, and the son of Carpenter and Nancy Jane (Bowmaster) Miller, was killed while on duty. At about that same time Percy Smith, also a railroad employee, and a son of Charles and Caroline Rebecca (Graham) Smith, lost his life in a fall from the top of a box-car. Another accidental death on the railroad was that of Harry Heverly, son of Joseph and Susan (Bowmaster) Heverly in 1905.

An industrial accident took the life of Alvan Streck in 1906. He was a son of John and Sarah (Llewellyn) Streck. In 1914 Elliot Gardner, a son of Joseph and Amanda (Bickel) Gardner, was killed in a mine accident. Elliot left a widow, Ethel (DeLong) Gardner (later Stevenson) and four small children. James Swartz, son of Henry and Mary (Confer) Swartz, was likewise killed by a mine cave-in in 1922. James's accident occurred only a short time after his marriage to widow Susan (McKean) Fudge. Records show that Sudie's first husband died out of town in 1907, possibly in an accident.

In 1924 a head-on collision between a New York Central train and a motor car carrying the Mapes station track maintenance crew resulted in one death. When the men on the car suddenly realized that a crash was imminent each of them, except William Bartley was able to jump to safety. The impact threw Mr. Bartley to the top of the locomotive, killing him instantly. On March 2, 1952 Arnold Killinger, accompanied by his young son, was driving over Hubbard's crossing, about one hundred yards from the Killinger home. The car was struck by a train killing little Kenneth, age five.

In the early 1930's a wreck on the NYCRR at Mapes Station left two dead and others injured. Two boys from a Hahn family, living at the old Brady farmhouse nearby, not realizing the seriousness of such an act, threw the switch leading to Mapes siding. By the time the engineer on a fast-moving westbound freight train realized he was being side-tracked, it was too late and the locomotive crashed into a string of freight cars loaded with steel rails. The fireman and brakeman were killed and the engineer was seriously injured.

Deaths caused by miscellaneous accidents include those of William Shearer, son of Lemuel and Catharine (Wensel) Shearer, in 1907; Terry Glossner, son of Frederick and Mary Delinda (Bitner) Glossner, in 1915; Dean Ellery Peters, son of Ellery and Blanche (Phillips) Peters, in 1939; Harry Heverly, the son of Wesley and Sarah (Kunes) Heverly, and the husband of Jeannette (Lindsey) Heverly, in 1955; and Elmer Peters, the son of Elmer and Emma (Scantlin) Peters, and the husband of Marie (Mann) Peters, in 1974.

After suffering for a number of years from a broken back received in a fall from a scaffold, Carl Heimer died in 1971. He was a son of Charles and Minnie (Whitehouse) Heimer, and the husband of Ethel (Phillips) Heimer. On June 24, 1941, while building a porch and front entranceway to the second floor apartment of the McKean building on Main Street, William Eaton of Blanchard fell to his death. Mr. Eaton, who was working with his father, George Eaton, lost his footing and landed on his head on the concrete floor below. Mr. Eaton's wife, Mae, a daughter of J. Irvin and Mabel (Hoffman) DeLong, was raised at Beech Creek.

In April, 1944 Doris Rowe, ten-year-old daughter of Charles and Hannah (Gummo) Rowe, was killed by a car while crossing the main highway at Haagen School, where she was a pupil. In 1946 Russell McCloskey, son of Alvin and Effie (Packer) McCloskey, and his wife, Zella (Jodun) McCloskey, were both killed in an automobile accident just east of town. Another instance of double deaths occurred farther east on the same highway in 1960. D. Ross Bitner, son of David and Julia (Rupert) Bitner, and Richard Conway, son of Ellsworth and Rhoda (Fye) Conway, were killed when their automobile hit the side of a bridge. Additional highway deaths include: Glenn Miller, the son of Owen and Irene (Scantlin) Miller, and the husband of Dorothy (Bitner) Miller; Floyd Haines, the son of Fount and Mary (Temons) Haines, and the husband of Doris (Confer) Haines; William Dunlap, young son of Raymond and Bessie (Hunter) Dunlap; Paul Bowers, son of Paul and Evelyn (Kline) Bowers; and more recently, Vaughn Phillips, the son of Amos and Edwina (Scantlin) Phillips, and the husband of Helen (Kline) Phillips.

A tragedy that occurred on a dark, rainy night in September, 1971 will not be soon forgotten. Richard Eppers, son of Stanley and Edna (Bechdel) Eppers, had arranged to pick up two young football hopefuls after their practice session at Bald Eagle-Nittany High School. The boys were Billy Aurand, age 12, the son of William and Kathryn Ann (Bechdel) Aurand, and Rickey Rupert, age 13, the son of Claude and Genevieve (Geise) Rupert. All three were killed when, because of poor visibility and slippery roads the Eppers car and another vehicle collided on a hill east of town. Mr. Eppers left a widow, the former Carol Stiver, now Bliler, and two young daughters.

We have had a number of military casualties in addition to those mentioned in another chapter. Benjamin Franklin Ligget, son of Benjamin and Sarah (Adams) Ligget, was killed in the Spanish-American War and is likely buried in an unmarked grave in David cemetery. Killed in action in World War II were the following: Paul Rupert, son of Fred and Ella (Mann) Rupert; Clarence Coffey, son of Clarence and Amanda (Casher) Coffey, and the husband of Pauline (Eaton) Coffey, now Leathers; and William Shearer, son of Frank and Lizzie (Robinson) Shearer. Two World War I soldiers, although not killed in action, died before returning home. They were C. Rudolph Shilling, son of Thomas and Mary (Wolfe) Shilling, and Edward Zerbe, the son of Henry and Lydia Zerbe, and the husband of Ellen (Batschelet) Zerbe, later Swartz.

On June 8, 1892 an unusual type of accident took the life of fifty-six-year-old Sarah (Brungard) Haagen, the wife of Saul Haagen. Sarah and her daughter, Minerva, one of eleven children, were traveling the mountain road from Mill Hall to their farm home in a horse-drawn carriage. The horses suddenly became frightened and broke into a fast gallop. They pulled the carriage over a pile of rocks, throwing Mrs. Haagen from the carriage and causing her death. Mr. Haagen died on November, 19, 1899 while visiting his oldest son, John, in Washington state.

In late 1919 undertaker Edgar Thompson Bechdel purchased his first motor-driven hearse. It was brought from Cincinnati by his son, Claude. According to newspaper accounts at that time, it was driven the entire distance of 550 miles without a mishap. The new vehicle was then in readiness for the upcoming funerals of William DeHaas, Joseph Brady, Mrs. Charles (Florence) White and Jonathan From, in this order. However, the old horse-drawn carriage was kept in reserve for days when bad roads precluded the use of the new conveyance.

When just a boy, age about twelve, Donald Rupert, son of Joseph G. and Tillie (Heimer) Rupert, received, endorsed and cashed his first check. The check, from New York Central Railroad, was an award for reporting a defective rail joint. Shortly thereafter Don, accompanied by his grandmother, made a trip to Lock Haven, where he spent the money for his first long-pants suit.

A confrontation between a local physician and a local German-born merchant at Cox's barber shop in June, 1917 was reported in area newspapers at the time. According to accounts patriotism was running high in the community and Dr. George H. Tibbins, along with eight other locals, had just volunteered for World War I service. The doctor was so enraged by remarks made by the merchant that he sprang from the chair where he was being shaved, and in rapid succession, placed punches to the nose of the German sympathizer. Following the incident local people placed American flags on the store of the German with threats that any attempt to remove them would lead to serious trouble for him.

Three months before the national census was taken in 1870 a son was born to Casper and Philomena "Phoebe" (Eckert) Peter in Beech Creek Township. In 1949 this son, William C., was named "National Father of the Year." This honor gave him nationwide publicity. Mr. Peter and his first wife, Emma (Gummo) Peter, a daughter of John E. and Elizabeth (Stephen) Gummo, had seven children; Mr. Peter and his second wife, Mary Mae (Walker) Myers Peter, a daughter of Cyrus Jeffrey and Mary J. (McCloskey) Walker, had twelve children. Eighteen of these nineteen grew to adulthood, and most of them had large families of their own. Since this country has had many large families, especially in Mr. Peter's day, it seems appropriate to conclude that the size of his family was only one factor in this citation. His was a family where industriousness and thrift were conveyed from the parents to the children. Each learned that self reliance was best for the individual and best for the country. In short, Mr. Peter and his wives provided a wholesome and inspiring family background. Mr. Peter died on December 12, 1955 at age 85. Fortunately our area, like many other farming areas of Pennsylvania, was settled by hardworking people of the type of Mr. Peter, mostly of German descent.

In addition to the sources previously outlined there was also a tendency to name newborns for the doctor who brought them into the world. Because of the general popularity of such names as William, Henry and Joseph there is no way to determine how many babies may have been named for Doctors William P. Rothrock, Henry H. Mothersbaugh or Joseph E. Tibbins. Yet there is one certainty — Joseph Tibbins Gunsallus, son of David and Lydia (Robb) Gunsallus. Tibbins, as he was always known, married Edith Williams, daughter of Henry C. B. Williams and his first wife, Albina (Brickley) Williams. A very glaring example is the name, Saylor, given to many baby boys in honor of Dr. Saylor J. McGhee, who incidentally, had been named for Samuel Saylor, an industrialist who came to our area in the middle 1800's. Another popular given name was that of McDowell, which likewise needs little explanation. Those of us who did not know Dr. P. McDowell Tibbins, have, no doubt, heard of him.

The name of Tibbins Gunsallus in the above paragraph is a reminder of the general mispronunciation and incorrect spelling of some of our family names over the years. The Gunsallus name has been pronounced as though spelled "Kunsawl." The late Ira Gunsallus of Liberty Township was a son of James and Sarah (Masden) Gunsallus, and an uncle of Tibbins Gunsallus. When Ira and Abigail Lucas of Unionville, Centre County were married on January 14, 1868 his name was listed in the Centre County newspapers as "Console." In 1870 Robert and Nancy Gunsallus, children of John and Martha (Linn) Gunsallus, were staying temporarily with their uncle and aunt, Edward and Elizabeth (Linn) DeHaas in Beech Creek. Their names were listed by the census taker as "Consol." In 1860 John and Sarah (Llewellyn) Streck were living in the mining settlement of Rock Cabin north of Beech Creek. Their home was very close to the home of John Reville, for whom the later community of Reveltown was named. Also living close by were Sarah's parents, John and Catharine Llewellyn. The census taker listed the Streck name as "Striker." In 1870 the census enumerator listed the name as "Strick." To this day it is not uncommon for members of this clan to be referred to as "Strikes." The Heverly name was long pronounced as though there was no "H." Our first Heverly, who had settled in this area before 1820 had actually changed his name from Everly to Heverly prior to his coming here. That the prior spelling was a factor in the mispronunciation seems questionable.

Casper Peter came from Germany some time before 1860. To agree with the pronunciation and spelling of the name generally applied by the public many of Casper's descendants have added "s" to the end of the name. Incidentally a Casper Peters came from Germany before 1820 and settled in Boggs Township, Centre County. Whether this Casper had added an "s" after arriving here is not known. Records reveal that as early as the 1830's, and likely earlier, our Quigley families were referred to as "Quiggle," a spelling and pronunciation that had been adopted by some of their cousins elsewhere. Our census taker in 1900, Robert Clark, himself a Quigley descendant, gave comfort to those who misspelled and mispronounced the name. Mr. Clark listed both his uncle James Quigley and his aunt Matilda Quigley, widow of Boyd, as "Quigle." However, judging by his spelling of the names of the others it may have been merely a case of poor spelling. There are various instances of early families acceding to a change in the spelling of their names to agree with spellings given by employers, assessors, tax collectors, census takers, store keepers, etc. For reasons unknown several families who descended from Andrew and Martha Linn, both buried at Hays-Fearon cemetery, changed their name to "Lynn." In more recent years some of the descendants of John and Susanna (Nestlerode) Bitner, both buried in the Nestlerode cemetery in Liberty Township, have added an extra "t." Might this be in respect to their early ancestor, Hans Gorg Boettner, who had migrated from Germany either prior to or after his marriage to Elizabeth Hershberger!

The burning of the Beech Creek railroad station of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company on August 1, 1924 was generally viewed as a case of arson. The company immediately set up improvised quarters in an old box car. However, local benefits were thereafter reduced to passenger and mail service only. A new, full-size, manned depot was then built at the Eagleville stop, and some years later local service was discontinued entirely.

In 1965 Guy A. Stull, a son of Frank and Grace (Hoffman) Stull and the husband of Hilda (Myers) Stull, lost his life while at work. When a crane broke he was crushed beneath a load of steel at the Jersey Shore Steel Company. In that same year Guy's nephew, Gerry, son of Bernice (Stull) Hedges, was killed in an automobile accident, and his brother, Clifford, died suddenly. The death of the mother one year earlier, the death of the father one year later and the death of their aunt, Eva (Marr) Stull, in that same year made the mid-1960's stand out as a tragic period for the Stull family. In September, 1944 Harold H. Miller, a cousin of the Stull brothers, became a World War II casualty while serving with the U. S. Paratroopers. Harold was a son of Omar Miller, who now lives at Beech Creek, and the late Mae (Stull) Miller. The Millers were former residents of Blanchard.

Edward Scantlin and his wife, Ellen Susan, a daughter of G. Fulton and Emeline (Bitner) Miller, operated a farm on the ridges north of town. In May, 1895 Mr. Scantlin was killed when kicked by a horse. He was survived by his widow, seven daughters, including Edwinna, only one day old, and one son, Loren, age two. Newspaper accounts later that year told of the voluntary assemblage of neighboring farmers to perform the harvesting chores. Silas Bitner, son of Abraham and Mary (Leathers) Bitner, was a former occupant of this same farm. In May, 1877 Mr. Bitner, age thirty-eight, the husband of the former Lavina Leonard, died from poison which entered his system while applying toxic spray. Three of the Bitners' seven children had died in the five years preceding Mr. Bitner's death and two more died in the seven months following.

Traffic was maintained on the old bridge while the present bridge at the edge of town was being constructed.

Frank Furl, son of J. Thomas and R. Jane "Jennie" (Ammerman) Furl, a locomotive fireman, died at age 24 on April 29, 1902 from burnus he received from a steam pipe explosion.

In July, 1971 Carl Mann, young son of Walter J. and Shirley (Spangler) Mann, was killed when he ran into the path of an automobile just east of the borough.

Our community received a tremendous shock on Wednesday, July 2, 1980. Around noontime on that day Bruce A. Bechdel, age 44, son of Dorothy (Bechdel) Bechdel and the late Claude H. Bechdel, was struck and killed by a truck. Bruce, who had operated the Bechdel Funeral Home following the death of his father in 1963, was hit while standing along the main highway east of town near an old farm home he was restoring. At the time of his death Bruce was leading a very busy and useful life. In addition to his undertaking duties he was a full-time high school teacher. His extra activities were directed chiefly toward his interests in history and antiques. He was president of the Clinton County Historical Society and was serving a number of other organizations in various capacities. In addition to his mother and wife, the former Helen Fontana, he was survived by two sons and one daughter. Just two days prior to his death Bruce had made plans with the authors of this history for a visit to the old, dilapidated Nestlerode Cemetery in Liberty Township. Having just learned of the existence of this cemetery he wanted to view the old markers. This alone is enough to confirm his interest in area history.

At noontime on September 19, 1929, when cashier J. A. Haugh was alone at the Beech Creek Bank, three men, already familiar with the layout, descended upon the bank in a daring daylight robbery. Mr. Haugh was held at gunpoint while the robbers scooped up the money; then he was locked inside the vault while they made their getaway. Mr. Haugh soon escaped from the vault by manipulating the controls from the inside. Suspecting that the trio was heading westward, he immediately alerted the Howard bank. Dr. George H. Tibbins, a member of our bank's first board, and a brother of its founder and president, Dr. P. McDowell Tibbins, was at the Howard bank when the call came in. Mr. Tibbins, being unsuccessful in stopping the robbers as they sped through Howard, immediately solicited the aid of Frank Williams, a brother of Beech Creek's bank director, Shuman S. Williams. Surmising the route they might take, Tibbins and Williams took a short cut to a point on the highway leading from Bald Eagle Valley to Snow Shoe. As the robbers passed their hiding place they fired a shot to disable their vehicle. Either from damages inflicted upon a tire or the steering mechanism, or merely from the unsuspected gunshot itself, the driver lost control. The car crashed into the side of a concrete bridge. The driver (Delaney) was fatally injured. The other two (Shope and Kline) were forced to flee on foot. Concealed in Delaney's pockets and clothing was found $12,000. The remaining $270 of their loot was recovered that evening when Shope and Kline were found hiding in a railway boxcar at Milesburg. Delaney died at Bellefonte hospital that same evening.

The late Joseph Allen, a highly-respected army major, who lived last in Prince George County, Virginia, often recalled being questioned regarding the Beech Creek Bank robbery. On that particular day Mr. Allen was hitchhiking through our valley on his way from Fort Sam Houston, Texas to his home in New York State. The police, in their search for the two men who had fled, were not overlooking any leads, and Mr. Allen, strolling along the highway, became a suspect. After routine questioning he was released. Mr. Allen, a friend of Frederick and Doris (Bechdel) McDermott, died in early February, 1978.

The bridge over Bald Eagle Creek at the mouth of Beech Creek, a huge wooden structure without cover, was washed out in 1876. It has been reported that in that same flood most of the lumber at the local saw mills was washed away, several houses were destroyed and a child was drowned. In 1877 a steel bridge was built to replace the bridge that was destroyed the previous year. In February, 1975 this steel bridge fell in during a period of high water. The collapse was the result of an undermining of the first pier caused by the onrushing waters of the fast-flowing Beech Creek stream. Prior to the construction of Foster Joseph Sayers Dam a higher level of water in Bald Eagle had slowed the flow of Beech Creek's waters long before reaching the pier. The disappearance in recent years of the build-up, or delta in the middle of the stream at its mouth was a clear indication of the increased velocity at that point. However, it appears that nobody was aware of the erosion beneath the pier.

On a bright Saturday morning in the Spring of 1978 the home of John and Helen (Streck) Miller on east Main Street was the scene of benevolence in action. Shortly after daybreak a group of men, about half of whom were sons and grandsons of James and Olive (Ellenberger) McKivison, had assembled at this residence. Their purpose was to place new roof shingles, an undertaking that Mr. Miller, then suffering an illness from which he never did recover, had been deeply concerned. In spite of his condition, the sound of steady hammering was sweet music to Mr. Miller, who was very grateful for what was taking place. The entire job was completed by noontime and each of about twenty-two men should have had the feeling of providing more beneficence in a half day than many of us bestow in a year.

In many ways our area benefits from the advances in technology and science and the planning that have been made in the last half century. Today we watch happenings around the world from our livingroom chair. We cook our meals on stoves that need no smoke stack. We refrigerate our foodstuffs without the need for an ice man. We use the old privy as a storage building if, perchance, it is still standing. We need to go only short distances to reach super highways and airports. However, conditions may have deteriorated in some respects. Fifty years ago the Philadelphia daily newspaper regularly reached town by railway express at 8:45 A. M. each day, Monday through Saturday, including all holidays. At that time a letter mailed to Mill Hall at 9:30 A. M. reached its destination one and one-half hours later. Even well after that time a house could be left unlocked day and night and even during brief absences with no fear of an intruder or robber. The tramp, on his endless journey, was served a meal on the doorstep, if not at the family table, with little or no apprehension on the part of anyone. Today anyone with the appearance and movement resembling a tramp must be viewed with suspicion. TIMES HAVE CHANGED FOR BETTER AND FOR WORSE.

Success Cases Among Our People

In addition to those named elsewhere in this story, a number of our people have achieved success in one way or another. Henry C. Bollinger, son of Christian and Eliza (Kirk) Bollinger reached the rank of colonel in the Union Army during the Civil War. Bollinger and his wife, Mary, a daughter of Joseph M. and Janetta (David) Smith, spent their latter years at Gettysburg, South Dakota. Dr. Britton Samuel Hall (1857-1894), son of Samuel and Sarah (McCloskey) Hall, became a highly regarded physician in the Lock Haven area before his untimely death. He is buried at Hays-Fearon Cemetery. Dr. Saylor J. McGhee, son of John and Julia (Harleman) McGhee, took a leading part in many Lock Haven civic, church and business activities, in addition to his busy medical practice. Saylor's nephew, Dr. Harrison J. McGhee (1888-1968), son of George C. and Minnie (Brady) McGhee, had a very similar career in Kane. The accomplishments of Dr. P. McDowell Tibbins and his dedication to the community where he was born and reared, are extolled in other chapters of this story. The medical careers of Dr. Tibbins, his brother, Dr. George H. Tibbins, and their father, Dr. J. E. Tibbins are highlighted in chapter four.

George F. Hess (1876-1959), son of George D. and Anna Frances (Furst) Hess, very ably served our community in more ways than this space can list. In 1898, following his graduation from Lafayette College, Mr. Hess assumed the position of local correspondent for the Lock Haven Express, relieving his father, who had performed the chore since 1882. A collection of the Hess semi-weekly news items could very well serve, in itself, as a history of our area. During his time George F. Hess became the "Mr. Beech Creek," and a replacement for him has not yet come along. Jesse L. Brady (1862-1952) and Clarence A. Brady (1871-1947), sons of Joseph and Sarah (Bitner) Brady, became ministers of the Christian Church, with Jesse eventually settling in California and Clarence in Michigan. Nevin McCloskey (1894-1954), son of Harry L. and Clara (Gephart) McCloskey, served many years in various locations as Methodist minister. Ira McCloskey, uncle of Nevin, and son of Abner and Abigail (Mason) McCloskey, made his mark in the educational field. In the 1890's Ira left his teaching position in Liberty Township to become the first principal of the Howard High School. He later became principal of Flemington High School, and still later began a long tenure as superintendent of Clinton County Schools.

In 1895 Graffius Hubbard, son of Joseph Hubbard and his first wife, Harriet (Weaver) Hubbard, resigned his teaching position at Snow Shoe to become principal of the Patton, Pa. High School. While in the field of education Mr. Hubbard became a proficient orator and later served for many years as orator for the Clinton County Pomona Grange. Charlotte Hubbard, a daughter of Joseph and his second wife, Sarah (Packer) Hubbard, taking advantage of her musical talent became a highly-regarded piano instructor, first at Beech Creek and later at Jersey Shore. Sarah Hubbard was a daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Robb) Packer. Malcolm Johnson (1896-1976), son of G. Mack and Sadie (Miller) Johnson, became superintendent of mines for Harbison Walker Refractories at Monument. Following retirement he returned to farming in the Beech Creek area. The senior Mr. Johnson, a son of Nathan Johnson and his second wife, Mary Jane (DeHaas) Johnson, had been named for Civil War General George B. McClellan, but later shortened his name.

In professional baseball Blaine W. Kunes, son of Frank and Carrie (Woodward) Kunes, was a long-time player in the St. Louis Cardinal organization, and later managed several minor league teams. Perry M. Mann (1914-1971), son of Frank and Anna (Dickey) Mann, was officer in charge of the Chambersburg barracks at the time of his retirement from the Pennsylvania State Police. Elwood L. Rohrbaugh, son of I. J. and Grace (Keiler) Rohrbaugh, recently retired as superintendent of Clearfield schools. Berwyn L. Miller, son of Charles W. and Mae (McCarthy) Miller, held a number of important government positions prior to and following a brief tenure as controller in the Pennsylvania Department of Commerce. G. David Hess, son of George F. and Mary (Quigley) Hess has written and published several books of poems, some of which depict former residents, while others describe objects of interest within the community. In his 1979 book, "Woven Nights and Days," Mr. Hess dedicated the following poem to the authors of this story:

Beech Creek's Four-Wheel-Drive and Four-Wheel-Steer Truck

Eleven days before I got to Earth
Upon May twenty-sixth, nineteen-fifteen,
The Beech Creek Truck and Auto Company --
Through stock sale for one hundred thousand grand,

Financed to make the heavy-duty trucks
 Upon the space that Spotts's store takes up —
 Had one truck climb Lock Haven's courthouse steps
 To demonstrate its ruggedness and power,
 Photographed for a calendar to show.
 At least one other truck was done, a third,
 Perhaps, but never cars assembled, ere
 Bankruptcy hit the proud investment five Years later, from no sales yet bills — so Dave
 Packer recalled the early enterprise
 Stockholders dreamed would make some of them rich
 From four-wheel-drive and four-wheel-steer design.

Dr. Howard Peters, son of Elmer and Marie (Mann) Peters, and Dr. Malcolm Heimer, son of Carl and Ethel (Phillips) Heimer, have distinguished themselves in the field of science. Mr. Peters recently completed the requirements for an additional doctorate, this in the field of law. He is now specializing in patent law. Wayne Miller, son of Robert and Eleanor (Bechdel) Miller, has been promoted to high management positions in the F. W. Woolworth chain. Barry Lingle, son of Harry A. and Vera (Thompson) Lingle, is west coast manager of Mobil's company-operated service stations. Clair J. Glock, son of Walter and Ellen (DeLong) Glock, was a civil engineer with the New York Central Railroad at the time of his death in 1967. Joseph D. Clark, son of W. Harold and Lula (Bechdel) Clark, followed his father's footsteps into the firebrick industry, and is presently in an important management position with General Refractories Co. Allan W. Lingle, son of Richard and Mabel (Brady) Lingle, has served in a number of high government positions in Alaska, including one term as state director of banking, finance and insurance. The latter three, Glock, Clark and Lingle, grew up together, each served in WWII, and each graduated from Penn State University, after which Mr. Lingle went on to receive a degree in law at Dickinson.

Many of the herein named persons, who have been singled out as succeeding in their particular endeavors, were products of our rural schools. The authors of this story were never convinced that the "Little Red Schoolhouse" was not providing a quality background for higher education. Their classmates in high school and beyond were from both rural and graded schools, with the rural-trained students equally or better prepared for advance training. In spite of the lack of indoor toilets and piped drinking water rural schools had one big advantage. The lower grade pupils, especially those who were inclined toward learning, could gain much from the teachings and recitations in the higher grades. During the 1950's, when the reformers reached a peak in closing and consolidating schools, two products of our one-room, ungraded schools, both already named, were destined to be the top students in their high school graduating class. One of our rural-school-trained pupils, then living in a foster home, is currently a successful physician in the Philadelphia area, and many others became very successful in such fields as nursing and teaching.

Following a period of duty as an MP in the Marine Corps, Gary Kunes, son of William and Vivian (Fravel) Kunes, entered police work in Washington, D. C. He has since served as officer and detective in the State College borough police force, and is now deputy sheriff of Centre County. It is widely predicted that Gary will rise still further in the field of law enforcement. Following his graduation from Bucknell University in 1931 Harold A. Robb, son of Leonard and Edith (Glossner) Robb, was elected principal of the local high school, a position he held for about ten years.

James A. Wensel (1857-1918), son of George and Ellen Eliza (Quigley) Wensel, a former schoolteacher, became deputy prothonotary of Clinton County. He later became deputy county treasurer, and still later a prominent figure in the banking business at Avis. Kenneth R. Brungard, who was born to Loudon D. Brungard and his second wife, Minnie (Breining) Brungard, at Beech Creek in 1923, followed his father's footsteps in the banking business. Kenneth began his banking career at Hughesville, later served as officer-in-charge and president of the Citizens Bank of Muncy, and currently is a vice president of Fidelity National, a large chain of banks with headquarters in Williamsport.

William Fearon, who was born in Beech Creek Township on December 16, 1815, followed civil engineering for the four years prior to 1840, at which time he took up farming near Salona. In 1843 he was elected Clinton County prothonotary and register and recorder, a combination position at that time. In 1854 he was elected to the first of two terms in our State legislature. In 1876 he was appointed to complete the term of Lock Haven alderman, G. W. Bachelder, lately deceased, and in 1877 was elected to a full term in that position.

James David (1828-1892), a local native, and Joseph Hubbard (1825-1906), who had come here from Bald Eagle Township, both served as county commissioners in the late 1800's. John McGhee, a son of John and Elizabeth (Linn) McGhee, served as a Clinton County auditor from 1890 to 1893. Robert Clark, son of James and Rebecca (Quigley) Clark, was a county sealer of weights and measures in the early 1900's. Robert W. Bullock, son of C. E. "Dix" Bullock and his first wife, Mary (Mann) Bullock, was a long-time Clinton County Register and Recorder. Sheldon Bitner, son of Christie and Catharine (Bartholomew) Bitner, was county veterans representative for a number of years. Joseph Berry, son of H. Clair and Mabel (DeHaas) Berry, was Clinton County highway superintendent during most of the 1970's. In 1979 Frederick D. Lingle, son of Harry A. and Vera (Thompson) Lingle, and a Lock Haven attorney, was elected by a large majority vote to the position of Clinton County's district attorney.

It is observed that in addition to our natives who "made good" a number of persons who had come here from elsewhere established themselves as first-class citizens. A perfect example is Joseph W. Merrey, a native of England, who came to this country at age twenty. After engaging in a number of business enterprises elsewhere in our county, and after his marriage to widow, Eliza (Magnus) Bailey, he settled in Beech Creek. Here he served as justice of the peace, school director and borough councilman. During the early 1880's he served briefly in the state legislature. In 1888 he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention that renominated President Grover Cleveland, who later lost the election to Benjamin Harrison. It seems reasonable to assume that Mr. Merrey was responsible for the planting of maple trees on Mill Street, all the way from Main Street to its southern end. Some time after the planting of these trees, most of which are still standing, the name of the street was officially and very appropriately changed to Maple Avenue. Mill Street was originally named for the large sawmill near the end of the street. This street was laid out to start at the borough line near the old covered bridge, continue in a generally northern direction, cross Main Street and end at the location of the present railroad bed.

As mentioned elsewhere, Victoria (Claflin) Woodhull-Martin became a presidential candidate on the Women's Rights ticket in 1872. If not born here, Victoria was born just before her family moved to Beech Creek, or very shortly after they moved from here. When Bellefonte Academy was established by an act of the State Legislature in 1805, three men from our township were named to the board. They were John Fearon, Matthew Allison and James Boyd.

Following a very successful career as a high school and college teacher and athletic coach, W. Max Bossert turned to government. Max served several terms as county commissioner prior to his tenure in the State House of Representatives. Max and his wife, Edith (Hoy) Bossert, an accomplished artist, live on the old Fearon farm, in the area where our first permanent settlers located. Dr. George H. Messerly (1911-1981) was born here to Conrad and Estelle (McCloskey) Messerly. He graduated from Lock Haven High School, earned his doctorate at Pennsylvania State University, and had a distinguished career in fields of science.

Lodges, Organizations and Miscellaneous Activities

William and LaFrances (Strong) Parsons were early residents of our town. When their third son was born here on August 10, 1844 he was given the same name as his father. Following graduation from Yale in 1868 young William entered law school, and received his degree the following year. Shortly thereafter he was admitted to the Clinton County bar, and later, following an appointment as district attorney, was elected to that same position.

James Chatham was born on April 24, 1814 in what is now Wayne Township in our county. Prior to and following his marriage to Henrietta DeHaas, a daughter of John P., III, and Hannah (Morrison) DeHaas, he distinguished himself both locally and county wide. While still a young man, according to historical accounts, he was a leader in local church work. Following one term as our county sheriff he operated a local store for two years. At age forty this ambitious gentleman decided to enter the field of law, and two years later began full practice. In 1861 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives. The local chapter of the DAR was named for his grandfather.

Giles W. Halenbake came to our area from New York state and married Frances "Fannie" Johnson, a daughter of Nathaniel and Sarah (Willis) Johnson, early area settlers. In 1850 Mr. Halenbake was elected to a three year term as a county auditor. The Ross Library in Lock Haven was named for Anna (Halenbake) Ross, a daughter of the Halenbakes. Another county auditor was Jacob Bitner, who was elected to the position after moving from our area to Nittany Valley. He was a son of Christian and Nancy (Dice) Bitner. His wife Nancy was a daughter of Samuel and Sarah (McCloskey) Hall.

John McGhee of Liberty Township married Julia Harleman, a daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Starns) Harleman of our township, and settled here. In 1890 John was elected to a full term as a county auditor. As is indicated elsewhere, John, an outstanding, public spirited citizen, held numerous township and borough offices prior to and following his tenure as auditor. The McGhees' house, built on Main Street in 1854, is currently occupied by Dorothy Hunter, a daughter of John H. and Etta (Mann) Hunter. It may be the oldest house in town.

Old newspaper accounts plus information provided by a great grandson, James Bobb of Hershey, reveal that Cline Quigley, son of Michael and Mary (Clark) Quigley, served at least one term as a Clinton County associate judge. Cline is best remembered as a successful lumberman and as a proprietor of the local hotel. As noted elsewhere he served as postmaster during the administration of James Buchanan. His nephew, Henry Quigley, later became judge of Centre County.

Over the years many of our organizations were joint efforts with Liberty Township, Beech Creek Township and Beech Creek Borough participating. An excellent example is the Grand Army of the Republic (GAR) Post 302, which was organized in Blanchard by Civil War veterans following that war. The post was named for a Beech Creek Township soldier who was killed in battle. He was George Harleman, son of Jesse and Elizabeth (Starns) Harleman. Following World War I Beech Creek Post 623 of the American Legion was organized and named for two Liberty Township soldiers who had likewise lost their lives in battle. They were Howard W. Bitner, son of Howard and Sarah Frances (Johnson) Bitner and Joseph R. Bechdel, son of Jacob C. and Lydia (DeHaas) Bechdel. Howard W. Bitner's father, also named Howard, had died the same year that young Howard was born. However, the boy later gained a step-father, Alfred Ferguson Bitner, a cousin of his father. Our churches were organized on an intercommunity basis and on several occasions in earlier years our communities were served by one post office.

A Beech Creek chapter of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows (IOOF) was chartered in 1850. However, this group and their sister lodge of Good Templars both disbanded after a fire destroyed their meeting place in 1855. Around 1874 the Patriotic Order Sons of America (POS of A) established a local camp. At a later date a companion organization, the Patriotic Order of America (PO of A) was formed for women. In November, 1874 the Grange of Patrons of Husbandry was organized. At that time the store of James Clark on Water Street became affiliated with the lodge, catering particularly to grange members. The local grange is still an active group. Also around 1874 the Washingtonians, a national group opposed to the sale of intoxicating beverages, developed a strong organization in Beech Creek.

The Lewanee Tribe, local lodge of the Improved Order of Red Men (IORM), was started at an early date and retained its charter until just several years ago, when the remaining members became members of the State lodge. Scouting for both boys and girls has been a "come-and-go" situation ever since the first troops were organized about eleven years after the scouting movement of England was introduced in America in 1910. Donald Glossner, a local school teacher and son of Albert and Ida Blanche (Miller) Glossner, was the local promoter and first scout master.

In the 1930's Thomas F. Kessinger and David M. Packer, aided principally by Russell J. Spangler and William H. Vonada of Blanchard, aroused enough interest to form the Beech Creek-Blanchard Volunteer Fire Company. Robert E. Murray was elected president of the organization. In March, 1939 Fire Chief Kessinger and Mr. Packer drove to Muncy to purchase a used truck, which, after conversion, became our first fire truck. In reality it was just a hose truck equipped with ladders and additional fire-fighting equipment. However, with the very high pressure in the local water lines, we were capable of throwing a stream to match many pumpers of that day. In the latter 1940's a renewed local effort resulted in the construction of the two-story masonry building that we know today. Subsequently a very active ambulance association was organized as an adjunct to the fire company. The original building, to which an annex was completed in the early 1970's, now houses two pumpers, a water truck and two ambulances. During 1979, a typical year, the local fire company responded to 40 calls. 8 were within Beech Creek Borough; 10 were in Beech Creek Township; 15 were in Liberty Township; 4 were in Curtin Township; and 3 were beyond the area.

A very worthwhile organization that went the way of many organizations, good or otherwise, was the Beech Creek-Blanchard Community Service Organization. During its life it sponsored many commendable projects, including a community Christmas tree, lighting contests, street markers in both towns, scouting programs and the annual Christmas Sing, which has continued ever since. The Senior Cheer Club, an inter-community group of senior citizens who are staying young while growing old, meets once a month most of the year for a friendly get-together, to enjoy a planned program and to make plans for future events, sight-seeing tours, shopping trips, etc.

The Beech Creek-Blanchard Memorial Day Parade, organized shortly after the Civil War, has changed considerably in appearance and routes over the years, but the tradition remains. In recounting early parades our predecessors usually mentioned the names of Uriah Kitchen, Peter Hoffman and Campbell McCloskey. If, at early morning during the late 1800's, these three gentlemen were observed walking to town in full Civil War regalia, it had to be Decoration Day. At that time it was customary for the parade to form in Blanchard. Following a full coverage of that town the paraders would sit down to a bountiful meal at Quigley's Hall, which had been converted to serve especially as a meeting place for the GAR. In the afternoon the parade would re-form in Beech Creek and cover all the local streets. Even in advanced years of age Kitchen, Hoffman and McCloskey and most of their comrades were eager and ready for this day of marching. In those days the parade was usually led by the local fife and drum corps, with all fraternal organizations of both towns in the line of march. After its organization the Blanchard Cornet Band took its place in this annual event. The IORM (Red Men) were in full Indian attire and other lodge members wore attractive, identifying shoulder epaulets. The local American Legion post, after its inception, assumed responsibility for the parade and made provision for the transportation of the few remaining "Old Soldiers", all then in advanced years of age.

Uriah Kitchen, who had also served in the Mexican War, was selected to unveil the Soldiers and Sailors Monument in Lock Haven when it was dedicated on Memorial Day in 1909. Harry Kitchen, youngest son of Uriah, married Josephine Watkins, a sister of Rachel McCloskey, the wife of Harry's uncle, Campbell McCloskey. The Watkins sisters were daughters of Samuel Morrison and Nancy Jane Watkins. Ellen, another sister of the Watkins girls, married Leslie Cottle, whose family had come from Maine when he was still a boy. Campbell McCloskey, a son of Joseph and Agnes McCloskey, was a great, great grandson of the widely-known Revolutionary War soldier, Cleary Campbell, who had married Ann Gamble at St. James Church in Lancaster on February 23, 1761. Sarah (McCloskey) Kitchen, wife of Uriah, was a great, great granddaughter.

Since the closing of the Presbyterian Church the building on Main Street has been utilized to promote youth activities. The sponsoring group, which includes people from Liberty Township, established the Friendship Community Center. In late 1978 a committee was formed to affect the establishment of a library. After considerable effort the Friendship Community Library, an outpost of the Ross Library of Lock Haven, opened in 1980 in a portion of the Community Building.

One organization that has endured is the local parent-teacher group established in the 1920's as the Parent-Teacher Association. Some years later this group, after voting against affiliation with a national group of the same name, was called an "outlaw group" by a national organizer. Our association, which escaped the outlaw term by later changing its name to Parent-Teacher Organization, is a close second to the American Legion as the oldest continuously-active organization in the community. Unless the same groups that are proposing more student busing, even during today's fuel shortage, are successful in moving our school elsewhere, the local PTO should continue active and productive.

Baseball has been our most popular sport since it was first inaugurated some time before the 1870's. However, modern-day teams have been hard pressed to match the superiority of those of the past. The account of a game between Beech Creek and Blanchard at Blanchard in 1871 is recorded in the Liberty Township Bicentennial book published in 1976. The Beech Creek aggregation of 1871 appears very interesting when related to the early settlers of our area. George G. Hastings, the catcher, a Bellefonte area native, was the son of Daniel and Mary (Hartsock) Hastings. He and his older brother, Enoch, a Civil War veteran, who later operated a store in Beech Creek, had come here several years earlier. George married a local girl, Lauretta Rogers, the daughter of T. A. Smith and Agnes (Miller) Rogers. Mr. Rogers had been named for Thomas Armstrong Smith, a local saddler in the early 1800's. George and Lauretta later moved to Centre County. The Hastings families of the Avis area are descendants.

William Rothrock, the pitcher, and his brother James, the second baseman, were sons of Dr. W. P. Rothrock. The doctor and his family, excepting his two oldest daughters, Susan and Harriet, later moved to a western state. Susan married William Mitchell, a surveyor and a son of the evangelist. Harriet married Jacob Cook, a son of Robert and Mary (Quinn) Cook of Howard, several years before her death in 1872. The doctor, one of a number of Central Pennsylvania doctors named Rothrock, later lived in Bellefonte and purchased land in Benner Township from Daniel and Louise (Alexander) Leyden, who then occupied the former Rothrock home on Water Street. The Rothrock baseball players were grandsons of Robert and Fannie (Quigley) Stewart.

At shortstop was Frank Quigley, a son of Cline and Agnes (Thompson) Quigley, and a grandson of Michael Quigley, our first postmaster. Frank later married Sadie Bailey, a step-daughter of Hon. Joseph W. Merrey, who was identified with mining, lumbering and manufacturing enterprises in our county. Merrey is best remembered locally for the development of the southern end of Maple Avenue.

Henry Clay Bollinger Williams, a son of George Q. and Elizabeth (Bollinger) Williams, was at first base. His brother, Christian Allison Williams, a later Blanchard merchant, was in right field. The Williams brothers were grandsons of George and Susan (Quiggle) Williams and of Christian and Eliza (Kirk) Bollinger, early area families. Henry C. B. Williams is best remembered as the manager of some very successful baseball teams during the late 1800's and early 1900's.

Everett Packer, a son of Asher and Nancy (Hall) Packer, was playing third base. Everett's paternal grandparents were Moses and Hannah (Packer) Packer. Moses was the son of Eli and Elizabeth (Vickers)

Packer, and Hannah was the daughter of Job and Hannah (Lamborn) Packer. Everett's mother, Nancy, was a daughter of Jesse Hall, born about 1781 in New Jersey and died in 1877 in Kendal County, Illinois, and his wife, Elizabeth (Johnson) Hall, who was born in England. The Halls came to this area during the early 1800's.

William Quigley "Quig" Clark, oldest son of James and Rebecca (Quigley) Clark, was playing center field. Mr. Clark's grandparents, William and Sarah (Hays) Clark, are listed among our earliest settlers. His grandfather, Nicholas Quigley, was an early Beech Creek tailor. In left field was William Kessinger, who had been borrowed from Blanchard for that particular game. His brother, Henry Franklin Kessinger, was pitching for Blanchard, whose extremely large margin of victory (74 to 24) that day is explainable. In those days the home team, even though already the winner, took its turn at bat in the ninth inning. The Kessinger boys were sons of Jefferson and Fannie (Nestlerode) Kessinger, and great grandsons of Christian Nestlerode and his first wife, Anna Margaret (Bott) Nestlerode, ancestors of many, many current residents. It is noted that five of our nine players were Quigley descendants. Only one Quigley descendant lives here today.

A July, 1877 issue of the Bellefonte Democratic Watchman newspaper reported that the Beech Creek baseball team had played a game at Howard and gave the home team a sound beating. The players were not named. During the first thirty years of this century local baseball teams gave a very good account of themselves, both as members of the old Clinton-Centre (C-C) League and as independents. In 1931 Beech Creek entered the Central League, won five straight championships, then moved to the Centre County League for two seasons. Returning to the Central League in 1938 our teams won several more championships before the end of that decade. Subsequent League representations have not been so outstanding, yet our teams have usually been close to the top if not on top.

Through the efforts, particularly of Delmas McCloskey, Little League baseball came to Beech Creek within several years after its inception. Delmas became the first manager. He was a son of Harry O. and Lula M. (Boone) McCloskey. Several years later, when Little League headquarters in Williamsport announced the Junior League program for boys just beyond Little League age, a team in this category was organized locally. Bob Miller, a son of Walter and Thelma (Burke) Miller and the husband of Claire Bitner, was chosen to be the manager. These early teams, members of the Intercommunity Leagues, made good showings. Some years later, because of the pressure of higher and higher fees and added regulations, our Intercommunity Leagues withdrew from the international organization. This move permitted a greater number of boys to participate.

As mentioned previously the annual Memorial Day parade was led, for many years, by the Beech Creek Military Fife and Drum Corps. This marching group, sometimes called the Linn Fife and Drum Corps because of the preponderance of Linn members, was organized some time after the Civil War. A standout performer was E. B. Roberts, who had been a military drummer in the war. A former local resident, Hugh Linn of Williamsport, a son of the late Chatham and Agnes (Quigley) Linn, declares that he has never seen the equals of drummer Roberts.

Our early settlers, using many Indian techniques, did considerable hunting and fishing in order to provide enough food for their families. Over the years these activities have become more of an organized sport than a necessity. The Great Ring Hunt, which took place in this area, is fully described in Linn's History, published in 1882. On November 5, 1902 the old Philadelphia North American, a daily newspaper, carried a picture of Richard Berryhill, our foremost hunter, about to leave his camp for a day's hunting. Later pictures showed Mr. Berryhill, his long-time hunting companion, Jonathan Abbott of Blanchard, and their entire hunting crew. When good fishing weather arrived Berryhill and his fishing companion, Sammy Bowmaster, would be seen traveling by horse and buggy to their favorite spots. For many years after his death the talents of Mr. Berryhill, familiarly known as "Uncle Dick," as a hunter, fisherman and recognized prognosticator were periodically mentioned by George F. Hess in his bi-weekly news columns.

Early Settlers More Fully Identified

As indicated previously our area was at one time a part of a very large township. For this reason it is difficult to establish exact locations of residents. Furthermore, the first census, taken in 1790, lists the families alphabetically with no clues as to their neighbors or respective area of residence. It is very evident, however, that the following settlers and their families were our neighbors, living just west of us in that part of our then large township that was to later become Liberty Township: John Masden (then usually spelled Marsden), John Gardner, Christian Bechdel, John Bitner, Daniel Kunes, Christian Nestlerode, the Liggets and Simon Rorabaugh, who had previously taken up residence in Pine Creek Township.

Pre-1800 settlers, who had chosen our particular area for at least semi-permanent residence, included the families of Major James and Nancy (Brown) Boyd, Lieutenant James and Sarah Hays, William and Beulah Templeton, William and Ann (Templeton) Fearon, John Fearon, Joseph Fearon, Richard "Dicky" and Anna Hays, Matthew Leitch, Patrick Linn, Joseph McCloskey, James McCloskey and Amos Williams. Other pre-1800 settlers, who chose our area or a nearby location in our valley, include Cleary and Ann (Gamble) Campbell, Mungo Lindsey, William Montgomery, Jacob Packer, John Spangler, Peter Spangler, George Wantz, Ellis Williams and Job and Hannah (Lambourn) Packer.

In constructing a place for the family to live, providing firewood, clearing land and planting and harvesting crops, our early settlers were busy from daylight to dark. The family's first shelter, usually a log cabin, was often enlarged or replaced as the family grew. Local taxing procedures after 1800 were discussed in Chapter I. Prior to 1800 some assessment records indicated the type and size of each home and the number of lights (windows). With very few exceptions the houses were described as log-type, and values ranged upward from twenty-eight dollars.

A very noticeable increase in the population of our township occurred between 1800 and 1810. Familiar names among the settlers of this period were: Matthew Allison, a Revolutionary War soldier, who lived in the Nittany Valley portion of our township, and who later served as a Centre County Commissioner; Allen and William Campbell and Jonathan and John DeLong, sons and sons-in-law of Cleary Campbell; Lemuel Farwell, whose given name was carried through many generations of Farwells; Amos, Amos, Jr., Edward and William Williams; Michael and John Kirk, who had lumbering and tanning interests; Patrick and Philip Mullen, the latter having later married Elizabeth Masden, widow of Justus "Yost" Masden; Lieutenant John Philip and Ann (Shippin) DeHaas and the Daniel Davids. Lieutenant DeHaas, son of Brigadier General John Philip and Eleanor (Bingham) DeHaas, came from Philadelphia and settled on a portion of the land holdings acquired by him for military service or else purchased from fellow officers. Daniel David, also a Revolutionary soldier, brought along at least four of his sons, namely Isaac, James, Carpenter and Alexander.

Other settlers of the 1800-1810 period included: William, Samuel and Henry Pletcher, who later joined their kin in the Howard area; Joseph Morrison, who, for many years after the death of his wife, Elizabeth, lived with his son-in-law, James Linn; William, Jacob, William, Jr. and David Reed, the latter two still unmarried in 1810; William and Sarah Miller; Caleb, William, Jr., Robert and Conrad Miller; and James and Nancy (Cryder) Miller, the ancestors of most of our Millers of the present day.

Current local family names that have existed continuously since an ancestor settled here in the early 1800's are surprisingly few. Those that can be identified and the year in which residence began are as follows: Packer (before 1800), Miller (1803), DeHaas (1806), Clark (1813), Lingle (1822), Haagen (1829), Bitner (1830), Linn (1834), Masden (1836), and Johnson (1841). It may be remembered that the Bitner, Linn and Masden settlers referred to here all came from Liberty Township. Several Masdens had crossed over to our area shortly after 1800, but they left no descendants who live here today. The first Johnsons came from England via Farrandsville and the first Lingles came from Linglestown via Mifflin County. Rises and declines over the years in the prevalence of family names is in very clear evidence. In 1880 we had eight Linn families; today we have one. In 1880 we had no Bechdel families in our specific area. In fact as late as 1910 we still had none, except that Lizzie Bechdel, daughter of Jacob and Isabella (Confer) Bechdel, was living with her sister, Dora, wife of Charles Cook. Today we have at least ten Bechdel families. In 1840 we had six Fearon families. Today we have none. In 1860 we had seven Hall families. Today we have none. In 1880 we had one Peter (Peters) family. Today we have more than twenty. Among the once popular names that do not exist locally today we find Hays, Quigley and Ligget.

In early days almost every family was engaged in farming, at least part time. However, there were some full-time, non-agricultural, occupations usually performed by self-employed persons. These jobs included blacksmith, miller, tanner, weaver, sawyer, distiller, cooper, tailor, shoemaker, carpenter, and stone mason. Persons engaged in these occupations were assessed accordingly. Taxes were also levied against such items as land, buildings, horses, cows, sawmills, yokes of oxen, gristmills, stills, workshops, etc. At various times taxes were levied against gold watches, money at interest and collateral inheritances. Assessors who served our township from 1801 to 1810 were James Boyd, Casper Richards, William Moore and John Heslet. County commissioners during the same period were John Hall, David Barr, Matthew Allison, Christopher Henney, James Green, Iac Hosterman, John Barron, John Kryder, John Snyder and F. McEwen. Mr. Allison was from our township.

Additional Families 1800 to 1810

Afterthoughts and Supplemental Notes

In the year 1900, according to census records, our area had a population of 972, with 525 in our township and 447 in our borough. Of that total only twenty-three are known to be still living. Of these just four reside here now. They are: Laura Confer, daughter of David and Demaris (Quay) Mapes; Bertha Hepler, daughter of Timothy and Mary (Steiner) McCarthy; Charles Martz, son of Edward and Bertha (Wren) Martz, and Myra Peters, daughter of George and Theda (Masden) Peters. The following still live in our broad general area: Nellie Cole, daughter of Lewis and Maud (Galbraith) Miller; Bertha Cryder, daughter of Chatham and Agnes (Quigley) Linn; Lester DeLong, son of J. Irvin and Mabel (Hoffman) DeLong; Orpha Eyer, daughter of William and Mary (McKibben) Bickel; Elma Glossner, daughter of John and Alta (Bitner) Peters; Hugh Linn, son of Chatham and Agnes, above; Florence and Chester McGhee, daughter and son of Oscar and Jemima (Haagen) McGhee; Harry Peters, son of William and Emma (Gummo) Peters; Ruth and Victor Peters, daughter and son of John and Alta, above; Pearl Putman Randals, daughter of George and Mollie "Maud" (Rorabaugh) Linn, and Olga Sundin, daughter of Ellis and Hilda (Anderson) Sundin. Residing at more distant points are: Jesse W. Bridgens, son of William and Sarah (Mapes) Bridgens; Jesse V. Glossner, son of Frederick and Mary Delinda (Bitner) Glossner; Ruthel Lasher, daughter of Percy and Jennie (Gardner) Trexler; Marie Leeuwerick, daughter of John W. and Sarah (DeLong) Waite, and George B. "Rabbit" Miller, son of W. Rothrock and Emma (Solars) Miller.

The development of Furst's Climax Healer, generally known as Tommy Furst's salve, was described earlier. Now it has been learned that several households still possess a quantity of this product. Mentioned occasionally in local conversations, even to this day, is Spruce Beer, a popular soft drink concoction that was processed and bottled by Richard Berryhill. Local advertising signs proclaimed his thirst quencher as, "The National Drink." After Mr. Berryhill's death a number of area people, including some of his close relatives, tried to duplicate his recipe. Their failures caused these people to proclaim that he took the real recipe with him. Another local product, very popular in its day and still talked about, was John Hunter's bologna. Made of coarsely-ground beef with crushed crackers added as a filler, it was the forerunner of the dry bologna being marketed today. There were, however, several other factors that made Mr. Hunter's product superior to many that are available at this time. He kept continuous control of the temperature of the kettle water, in which the stuffed product was submerged, and the timing was very important. The coils of bologna were then exposed to hickory smoke of the proper density for exactly the right length of time.

Kolon Kleener, an effective laxative with cathartic qualities, was prepared and distributed in the 1920's by the McKean brothers, Sheldon and Lyle, who are listed elsewhere as barbers. Their product had the appearance of powdered sugar, but the taste was quite different. It was boxed in the old-style, round, half-pint ice cream boxes. The label listed Federal Laboratories of Beech Creek as the manufacturer. More importantly, however, was the fact that the label claimed the recommendation of Dr. George H. Tibbins. The McKean brothers were never pressed to reveal their formula. However, it was generally conjectured that the main ingredient was pure epsom salts with something added to make the taste more appealing. Not a bad idea! William and Flora (Heichel) DeWitt and their three children lived on Vesper Street in the house now occupied by the Lee Waite family. Mr. DeWitt, a carpenter and handyman, is best remembered for his development of a hair tonic. Prior to putting his discovery on the market, it is reported, he decided to try it on himself and lost all his hair. Many heavy-bearded, hard-to-shave men later remarked that they'd like to have some of his product for their faces.

As was likely the case throughout the country during prohibition, a number of area residents attempted to produce a better quality of home-brewed beer. For some it was a case of trying to increase the demand for their illegally-sold brew. For most it was merely trying to improve the taste of a product used strictly for home consumption. One local resident, who did not imbibe in alcoholic drinks, but upon hearing so much talk about the making of home brew, decided to "set an old hen," a common term for the home brewing process. He never mentioned how well his experiment turned out or how he disposed of it. Equally interesting in those days was the various types of additives that went into a barrel of sweet cider to produce a tastier, peppier hard cider that would not turn to vinegar.

The stone masonry Kessinger building on Main Street stands as a monument to the late William F. Kessinger (1875-1947), a son of H. Franklin and Anna (Nestlerode) Kessinger. Having been born and lived at Eagleville Station, Billy was, therefore, not a local resident. Nevertheless, he was a part of us during many years of the building's construction. Then, too, he had many, many local cousins, some being double cousins. Except for the placement of structural steel, the electrical wiring and other modern day features, Billy, aided first by Barney Rupert, and later by Hallie Slaterbeck, performed all the masonry and carpentry chores. At the outset of construction Billy had detailed the project to several onlookers, including George C. McGhee. Their seemingly appropriate response was, "You'll never get it finished." After the building was completed Billy enjoyed recounting this conversation. He is buried at the local Hays-Fearon cemetery.

Prior to the construction of his garage on Main Street, Thomas F. Kessinger maintained his automobile repair shop in a part of the old Sykes garage, a two story structure on Locust Street. This same building was later used for auto repairs by Harry and Clarence DeLong, sons of Irvin and Mabel (Hoffman) DeLong, by Clyde Lewis, and by Edwin Williams, a son of John and Belle (Winters) Williams. Mr. Williams later moved his shop to the Cook building at the intersection on Main and Water Streets, where William B. Cook, a son of Charles and Dora (Bechdel) Cook, later conducted his automobile dealership. Some time afterward Paul Bechdel, a son of Claude and Dorothy (Bechdel) Bechdel, remodeled the Cook building to include a show room for Kaiser-Frazer automobiles. This same building now serves as Borough headquarters. The Sykes garage building was originally constructed by Edward Sykes for his Overland automobile agency. The present-day auto repair business of Fred Berry, son of Joseph and Pauline (McCloskey) Berry, is located in our township near the house where Fred's grandparents, Clair and Mabel (DeHaas) Berry raised a large family.

It was pointed out in a previous chapter that families quite often gave a new-born baby the same name as an older, deceased sibling. Mentioned was the family of Joseph M. and Janet (David) Smith. Their second son, Charles P., who was born July 2, 1834, died October 15, 1835. On August 22, 1837 another son was born into this family. He was likewise named Charles P. In 1845 the Smith family was blessed with their third daughter, who was named Emily. Emily died on October 3, 1850. Three years later another daughter, who was destined to receive the name Emily, came into the world. This Emily, the fourteenth of fifteen children, was followed by Alice, who grew up to marry John B. Miller. Doris Miller is a granddaughter. Back on January 1, 1809 a son, to be named Christian, was born to Christian and Mary (Leathers) Bechdel, the great, great grandparents of Lula job himself. On his next visit to the Lingle shop he had one clipper-width swath up the right side of his head and another swath in the back. When he left he was very happy, not just because his botchery was corrected for just ten cents, but also because the barber bought his clippers for exactly the same amount he had paid for them. The clipper deal provided that the patron would accept payment in terms of future hair cuts rather than outright cash.

Census records reveal that in earlier days many girls, particularly teenagers, did live-in house work and were classified as servants. In 1880, for example, Isabelle and Annie Bowes, daughters of James and Sarah (Bechdel) Bowes of Liberty Township, were living in Beech Creek with the families of Stillman Keyes and Charles Keyes, respectively. Isabelle, who was born in 1860, before the National Census was taken, and not in 1861 as she had always believed, later married J. Alfred Miller, youngest son of John and Nancy (Nestlerode) Miller of Beech Creek Township. Annie married John Wallace. Just three doors from the Charles Keyes home, Virginia DeHaas, oldest daughter of J. Riley DeHaas and his first wife, Mary (Bechdel) DeHaas, was doing domestic work in the William and Elmira (White) Trexler home. Virginia later married William Kintzing. Sometimes these young domestics were enumerated both in their own homes and also in the households where they worked, as was the case of Virginia DeHaas. But, just as often they were not listed anywhere, each family believing that she would be counted in the other household. Live-ins in those days very often included parents of one or both of the householders, young men doing farm work, and grandchildren, or others, who were orphaned particularly by the loss of their mothers.

In early days many females, who, at birth, received the middle name, Jane, were known throughout most of their lives as Jane with their first name used as the middle name, or dropped entirely. In some instances the middle name, Jane, was substituted for the actual first name before the child was old enough to realize she had a name. In other cases the child may have grown to womanhood before her middle name was completely adopted as her given name. In either instance she was usually called "Jennie," the common nickname, for Jane. To check in later years the exact full name assigned at birth was difficult. Baptismal records were seldom preserved. Family bible records, if any, provided the best help, especially if they had been completed on a timely basis. However, in most cases no bible entries were made until and unless the one person who was recognized as the best hand writer in the area was engaged — for a fee. At one time Irvin DeLong, son of J. I. DeLong and his first wife, Ellen (Gardner) DeLong, while still a young man, did much of this writing. Irvin's sister, Mary Jane, who married W. Frank Berry, a local leather worker, presents a perfect example of what this paragraph set out to show. Census records listed her as Mary Jane during the first thirty-five years of her life. But, by 1900 she was Jennie M., the name by which she was known the remainder of her life, and by which she is buried at Hays-Fearon cemetery

Many of the items in this story, and especially in this chapter, were prepared in answer to questions that arise in present-day conversations. This particular paragraph is a typical example. With the recent closing of the Gundlach Garage on Main Street, which had been originally opened by Robert Dunlap, we now have just two gasoline retailers, the Myers Garage and the Scantlin Garage. Gasoline dispensers of the past included the Kessinger Garage, the Beech Creek Hotel, Dave Bitner's Place and the service station owned by the late Clair Johnson, all on Main Street. On Maple Avenue gasoline was sold at the residence of I. J. Rohrbaugh and at the Beech Haven, operated by Jack DeSau. On Locust Street it was sold at the Sykes store and later at the garage of Clyde Lewis. On Route 364 gasoline could be obtained at the farm home of Charles and Margaret Rupert and son, Torrence, now the home of William and Marilyn Bitner. Our first gasoline dispensing pumps required one full course of the crank for each gallon. Then the crank had to be turned back to its original position. Each gallon was registered by the hand of a clock-like dial. This style pump was later replaced by a type that required hand pumping the desired number of gallons, up to five, into a large glass cylinder at the top of the pump. When released the fluid flowed by gravity through the hose.

Joseph C. Earon (1883-1957), son of John and Anna (Quay) Earon, did farming during his first thirty-five working years. At the same time he mastered the blacksmithing trade, including the shoeing of horses. When Joe retired from farming and moved to town he fired up his forge and kept busy throughout his remaining years. It has been suggested that Joe should have been included in the listing of blacksmiths in Chapter IV. The authors agree.

For the 1869-1870 period there was published a directory of the business and professional people and the skilled craftsmen in a number of towns in central Pennsylvania. Lock Haven, Beech Creek, Howard and Mt. Eagle of this general area were included. This particular publication reveals that our own David Mapes was then serving as one of our three county auditors. This information had not come to light in any previous research. This hard bound book is filled with advertisements and may have been published specifically for the income from them. The name of the printer could not be found. The Beech Creek listings failed to include Fleming Trexler among the shoemakers. He had already mastered the trade. Missing from their carpenter listings were John I. Kunes and James McGhee. Irvin Hanscome was not included with the blacksmiths, while John W. Crays and Charles W. Montgomery did not show up in their profession as engineers. Their listings showed seven storekeepers, but failed to include George Furst, our leading merchant at that time, and Enoch Hastings, who had opened his store several years earlier. They named six persons engaged in the production or sale of lumber, two of whom were manufacturing shingles, but they failed to include John A. Cook. John, shortly thereafter, left our area, but is buried at Hays-Fearon cemetery alongside his wife, a Hays descendant. Two prominent grist millers, Joseph M. DeHaas and William B. Foresman were not named. Also missing were Daniel Kunes, the local butcher, and John Harleman, a stone mason. During the years covered by this book and for many years after, Rachel Huff, the widow of Edmond Huff, was supporting her young family by doing weaving in her own home. She should have been recognized. Richard Gundlach of our town has a copy of the book referred to herein.

In the chapter dealing with industry mention was made of the milk processing plant on Main Street in a small building that now serves as a family residence. This plant, then known as a skimming plant, was a division of the Bellefonte Creamery. In April, 1902 the operation was discontinued and the equipment was moved to Howard by Boyd N. Wilson, then living at Howard. Mr. Wilson, a native of our area was a son of William J. and Barbara (Myers) Wilson. Boyd's wife, Gertrude, also an area native, was a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Kane) Linn. Incidentally, Harry Wilson, who operated a clothing store in Lock Haven for many years, was a brother of Boyd. Their sister, Mary, married Sherman Holter, whose mother, Mary (Miller) Holter, was raised in our township.

The Lock Haven Evening Express reported on April 26, 1902 that Mr. L. Richardson, proprietor of the drug store in Beech Creek, was visiting Costello, Pa. Efforts to learn the exact location of his place of business were not successful.

For the school year of 1891-1892 the Beech Creek Borough school pupils having perfect attendance were listed in the local news column of the Lock Haven weekly newspaper. The following were named: Frank and Charles Pollock, Robert and Tenna Bullock, Ellery and Thomas Winslow, Frank and Mamie Snyder, Clarence Williams, George Searle, Taylor Slacker, George Heverly, George Miller, Ada and Mattie Packer, Pansy and Jennie Casselberry, Ida and Altie Slacker, Frances Harvey, Edith and Vivian Berry, Ellen and Florence Blair, Ethel McGhee, Laura Smith, Josie Burlingame, Roy Mobley, Willie Lamkin, Harry Confer, John Miller, Damie and Ira Lingle, Walter Miller, Haven and Lemmie Farwell, Ralph Hall, Charles Miller, Jesse and Sherman Heverly, Willie Merrey, Lula McKean, Mae McCarthy, Ella Miller, Mabel Shearer, Bertha Keagle, Cora Snyder, Blanche Bridgens, Alva Linn, Elida Lorrh, John W. Johnson and Jennie Deise. The teachers were Cora Chatham and Dora Bechdel (later Cook), the mother of William B. Cook, now of Lock Haven. It is interesting to note that of the thirty-three family names represented by the pupils only nine families of the same names live here today. Of these nine at least four are from entirely different family lines.

Ira E. Cowling, teacher at the Hubbard School in Beech Creek Township, presented a printed souvenir card to each of his 1898-1899 school term pupils. The card, which included the pupils' names, indicates a school term of 120 days. The pupils were Gertrude Batschelet, Mabel Brady, Floyd Furl, John Furl, Lottie Gunsallus, May Gunsallus, Myra Gunsallus, Charles Heimer, Jacob Heimer, Tillie Heimer, John Herr, Samuel Herr, Charlotte Hubbard, Morris Hubbard, Frank Kuhn, Florence "Floy" Linn, Fountain Linn, Kelsey Linn, Roy Linn, George Miller, John Miller, Percy Miller, Augustus Smith, Janet Smith and Annabelle Whamond. Of the twenty-five pupils only seven remained here and raised families.

Back in the days when the Beech Creek Railroad was a very busy line Bert Hill of Jersey Shore, a railroad employee, wrote a poem entitled, "Old Timers on the Beech Creek." The poem of Mr. Hill, who had married a Beech Creek girl, depicted the duties of a number of his fellow workers. His poem was published in the Lock Haven Express in the late 1970's. Familiar names mentioned were George Keagle, John Winslow, Ed Leyden, Wilson Forcey, William Bartley, William Ruple, Oscar DeLong, Gray Hastings, Thomas Winslow, John Bowes, George Bullock, James Harvey, Joe and Fred Roffe, Harry Packer, Charles Bitner, Charles Long, Clair Berry, Joe McCloskey, Pat McLaughlin and Phil Frederick, who, many years later, closed out his career at the Beech Creek station. The accidental death of Mr. Bartley, while employed on the track, was reported in an earlier chapter.

Our own Dr. George H. Tibbins, then practicing in Wyoming County, is credited as being the first person to drive an automobile into Clinton County. This year was about 1898 and the doctor was driving to Beech Creek to visit his father, Dr. J. E. Tibbins. Several years earlier the Hi Henry Circus had brought an automobile to Clinton County. However, Dr. Tibbins held the distinction of driving the first car into our county and our town. At that very time Dr. George may have been contemplating moving his practice to Beech Creek, which he did several years later.

Deeper research reveals that the "Seven Kitchens" on Main Street became a reality only after Dick Berryhill's inn and his wagon repair shop had been joined to form a single unit. A close look at the picture of his building, which is displayed in this book, shows the exact place where the two structures had been attached. Also showing in the picture is a tiny corner of the roof of Silas Hess store building, which was next door, to the East. An 1862 map, which identifies the three separate buildings, is in possession of William Tyson of our town. George D. Hess later built a garage on the site of the Silas Hess store building. If any family relationship existed between Silas Hess and George D. Hess, it has not been established. However, their wives were not-too-distant cousins.

Much has been written regarding Buckman "Buck" Claflin and his daughter, Victoria (Claflin) Woodhull-Martin, the Equal Rights party's candidate for U. S. president in 1872. Some accounts claim that the Claflin family lived here two, and possibly three, times. If so, each stay was short. Official assessment records reveal that "Buck" was taxed as a storekeeper in 1829. For the 1830 taxable year he was marked "Gone." There is no record of his being assessed at any time as a school teacher, the occupation generally associated with his residence here. The Claflin family is not listed in any of the decennial census records of our area.

Most of the credit for the construction of the Wesleyan Church building on Main Street should go to the late B. Frank Bowers. Mr.

Bowers, in earlier years, had come from the Flat Rock, now Rote, area of Lamar Township and married Annie Shilling, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Wolfe) Shilling. Frank, an all-round handyman, did the planning, supervising and all the skilled chores throughout the building's complete construction. A unique feature was the extension of the foundation wall sufficiently beyond the framework to provide a base for brick veneering, if ever added. This gives the building a somewhat unusual, yet attractive, appearance.

In 1980 a project to provide public housing for the elderly was announced for Beech Creek Borough. Plans are to locate the structures just off East Main Street, to the South. At about the same time plans were developed to determine the feasibility of producing, by water power at Sayers Dam, electricity to be sold to West Penn Power Company for distribution in this part of Lower Bald Eagle Valley. It is assumed that in these days of fuel conservation the power company would welcome an additional supply of current if, of course, it can be produced competitively.

In 1892 the Beech Creek Normal School was organized by J. E. Wilson and Dr. Rolla B. Fore, who later married Carrie DeLong and lived in Blanchard. The first ten-week term started on April 11 of that year. Courses were offered in elocution, composition, rhetoric, logic, literature, mathematics and at least fifteen additional fields. No information is available to show how long this school was continued.

For a number of years the McKean brothers, Sheldon and Lyle, operated a combination pool hall and barber shop on Main Street. Sheldon took full charge of the pool room, while Lyle limited his work almost entirely to barbering. On one particular evening when Sheldon's assistant was running the pool room, and Lyle, too, was absent, George Montgomery "Mont" Gunsallus, son of Ira and Abigail (Lucas) Gunsallus, stopped in for a shave. Soon after "Monte" had seated himself in the barber chair Walter E. "Beechie" Miller, who was among those present, was at his side. To the complete amazement of all the bystanders "Beechie" forthrightly proceeded to administer the shave. Mr. Gunsallus, quite appreciative of his free shave, was soon on his way. A short time later "Beechie," the son of J. Orrie and Virginia (Campman) Miller, possibly buoyed by this successful experience, entered barber school, where he learned a trade that he followed for the next fifty-one years.

In 1900 John Rothrock of Beech Creek Township was hailed by various newspapers as the youngest telegraph operator in the state. John was a son of Charles and Mary Ella (Haagen) Rothrock. He was a grandson of Dr. Thomas Rothrock of Eagleville, who died that very same year, and of John and Fayette (Brungard) Haagen of our township. At the time of the citation John was substituting for his ill father, one of two brothers, who had become telegraph operators on the Bald Eagle Valley Railroad. His family was living at the southern end of what is now Wynn Avenue. When one is reminded that this young man was sending telegraph messages and directing train crews, he or she will be very surprised to learn that John was then just twelve years of age. He died unmarried in 1961, and is buried at Hays-Fearon cemetery beside his mother, who died three years earlier at age eighty-nine.

The mentioning of the Haagen name in the paragraph above is a reminder of Bill Haagen's grain threshing outfit. Starting in late Summer each year Mr. Haagen moved from farm to farm. His powerful steam engine had the general appearance of a dinkey locomotive. When followed by the water tank wagon, the thresher and the baler, one was apt to think that a train had come off the track and onto the highway. Mr. Haagen, a son of John and Fayette, raised a family of fifteen in our township.

Historical publications of 1890 state that William Clark, father of James Clark, the Water Street merchant, settled here in 1792. William was actually only eight years of age in 1792. Perhaps the reference is to James Clark's grandfather, also named William, and the first of a number of area coopers of the Clark name. Even so, the 1792 date seems incorrect since the senior William was not assessed until 1815, and was not listed on local census records until 1820. In 1819 the younger William, who had likewise learned the cooper trade, was assessed for the first time, appearing on the "Single Man" list. In 1820 the younger William was marked "Married," his wife being Sarah Hays, a daughter of Dickie and Anna Hays. William and Sarah were not about to let the name "William" die. Their son of that same name married Charlotte Hall on March 6, 1855. Charlotte was a daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Johnson) Hall.

In 1870 William Rupert was officially listed as a carpenter. By 1875 he became sufficiently interested in the field of cabinet making to enter the coffin manufacturing business. In a historical publication of 1875 he was listed as the local undertaker. However by 1880 he had redirected his woodworking talents toward wagon making as noted in an earlier chapter of this story. Our early undertakers, it should be pointed out, were primarily cabinet makers who specialized in coffins. Prior to Mr. Rupert's brief stint in undertaking, and for the sixty-five following years, we were without a local undertaker.

In an earlier chapter mention was made of the already high number of men employed by the local brick plant at the time of its eighth year of operation in 1909. These figures were obtained from an unofficial survey of our town prepared, perhaps, by a telephone company. At that time two telephone companies, Bell and Commercial, were competing for local subscribers. The Commercial company, which established a local exchange, was already in the lead, and eventually won out, but not until the 1920's. During the intervening years some local subscribers had both Bell and Commercial connections. In 1909 twelve local men, each of whom is identified in a previous chapter, were employed by our two railroads as telegraph operators. Such a high number leads one to assume that a number of these operators were employed at towers and stations at other points. Then, too, some may have been trainees. The one noticeable statistic in the 1909 survey indicates the decline that was taking place in the number of persons employed in lumber production. When the official census records for the 1910 enumeration are eventually released they should closely conform to the data contained herein.

Fleming P. Trexler, long-time local shoemaker and outstanding citizen, was known for his tenor singing voice. He was often called upon to sing a particular song, that was not only his favorite but also the favorite of audiences — Tenting on the Old Camp Ground. Flem was still a young boy when his family came here from Jersey Shore. Some time after he closed his cobbler shop Michael Salvia of Lock Haven opened a shoe repair shop in the small building on Main Street, where Clarence Rossman had maintained an office for insurance sales and local tax collection. Mr. Salvia arrived daily on the morning train, carrying a basket that contained enough food for two meals. He departed each evening on the night train.

As previously stated the National census records for the year 1890 were destroyed by fire. However, in that same year a special census of Civil War veterans, or their surviving spouses, was completed. This enumeration revealed each soldier's rank, branch of service, regiment and company, and included the enlistment and discharge dates. The following from our area were listed: Joseph Bitner, Joseph Brady, William A. Bridgens, William T. Buck, Margaret Bullock (widow of William C.), Nelson Caldwell, John Cook, James Riley DeHaas, John C. DeLong, William J. Eyer, James A. Falls, John E. Gummo, James Harleman, John S. Harleman, Enoch W. Hastings, Joseph Heverly, Peter Hoffman, Uriah Kitchen, Daniel Leyden, Francis Mills Linn, James A. Linn, Joseph M. Linn, John D. Lyons, Campbell McCloskey, John C. McGhee, Carpenter Miller, William Montgomery, James B. Moore, Samuel Mortimer, John Myers, Joseph Myers, Michael Myers, George W. Packer, George W. Searle, John A. Smith, Michael G. Stahl, Mary E. Swartz (widow of Henry E.), Joseph E. Tibbins, Fleming P. Trexler, William Waite, Edward Williams and William J. Wilson. Several of these men served more than one enlistment. Not included, of course, were our soldiers who did not return. They are named in an earlier chapter of this story. Records indicate that the following local men also served in the Union Army, but were not living here in 1890: Henry Bollinger, Samuel Bowman, Sylvester Brady, William Calderwood, William Crispen, Henry Kirk Graham, Thomas Harleman, William Huff, William C. Miller, Andrew Myers, Emanuel Nestlerode, James Nestlerode and James A. Quigley.

It has been mentioned that, in addition to long standing family names and bible names, many newborns received the names of local doctors, ministers, etc. Daniel Dobbins Gunsallus, born around 1822, and generally known as Dobbin, was one of a number of babies named for Dr. Daniel Dobbins of Bellefonte. Mr. Gunsallus, the son of Wesley and the grandson of Revolutionary War soldier, Richard Gunsallus, lived in our township for a period following his marriage to Nancy Confer. The Daniel Dobbin name became quite popular among Nancy's Confer kin for at least the next one hundred years. It is remembered that the late Daniel Dobbin Confer was severely injured during the sneaky Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. His wife, Betty, the daughter of Lloyd and Mary (Uhl) Bechdel, was born here. Another doctor to whom many area residents owed their name was Dr. Ira D. Canfield, who had begun his very successful career at Jacksonville. This doctor later moved his practice to Clinton County, where on September 3, 1867, at age 63, he was drowned in the Susquehanna River.

At one time it was quite customary to clip and preserve a lock of hair from a deceased loved-one. In those days preparation for burial fell upon the deceased person's relatives and friends. However, assistance was often obtained from the one or more persons in the neighborhood familiar with the task. This procedure easily allowed for the clipping of a favorite lock. Saved over the years and currently in possession of the authors of this story are three such locks. They are sealed in envelopes and identified as being from the following: Girard Bitner, son of Abraham and Mary (Leathers) Bitner, who died in 1852 at age twenty; James Leathers, son of John and Barbara (Bitner) Leathers, who died in 1860 at age twenty-three; and Andrew Brady, son of James and Mary (Locke) Brady, who died in 1859 at age twenty-two. The ages of these three may be an indication that the custom prevailed particularly when someone died prematurely. James Leathers was a younger brother of John Bitner Leathers, the Mt. Eagle potter, whose crocks have become a highly-priced collectors' item.

In the late 1920's Griffith's 5 and 10 cent store in Lock Haven, announced that it was discontinuing business. Sheldon C. "Shed" McKean, thereupon, purchased the entire stock of that store. Following a quick renovation of the vacant room adjoining his pool hall, and the purchase of supplemental merchandise, Mr. McKean opened McKean's Variety Store which employed two sales girls. The grand opening featured background music provided by a phonograph. An outdoor sign advertised "Notions, Novelties and Necessities" in a price range of 5 cents to 25 cents. Today's residents are hard pressed to recall just how long this store was continued.

For a number of years Fairview Street in our town was nicknamed "Laudenum" Street. The nickname became so popular that it was assumed by many younger people to be the real name. This name had been applied because a certain widow (name withheld) in that part of town was known for her constant use of the laudenum drug.

On the evening of November 8, 1980 the home of Robert and Yvonne (Wohlfert) Boob on Harrison Street was gutted by fire of unknown origin. This house is located on the inside of the sharp turn where Harrison Street leads to Water Street. Early maps show that in 1862 this was the location of George W. Sterling's residence and tailor shop. Mr. Boob is a grandson of Elmer Young, a long-time resident of our township, who lived to age ninety-seven. The interior and roof of the home of William T. Kessinger on Main Street were very extensively damaged by fire on the evening of December 16, 1980. This house, built in the 1870's by Jesse S. and Blanche (Owens) Hall, was occupied for more than fifty years by the Hall family.

In December 1980 considerable newspaper publicity was given to "Onward Victoria," a current Broadway musical depicting the life of Victoria (Clafin) Woodhull, whose family is mentioned in an earlier chapter of this story as having lived in Beech Creek. It was stated that Victoria was born in Home, Ohio in 1838. Her birth year is a clear indication that she was not born here as had been thought by some. Having left here about 1830 her family was likely one of a number of families that moved from here to Ohio around that time. William B. Collins, the Philadelphia Inquirer's theater critic, not quite satisfied with the Broadway production, wrote that Victoria was "A promising subject for a musical of walloping impact, which 'Onward Victoria' is not."

An automobile repair business, specializing in body work, was recently opened by John Gundlach, a son of Jack and Pauline (Hawkins) Gundlach. The shop is located just beyond the entrance of the mountain road that leads to Renovo. This portion of the road, along the side of the mountain, was originally built to serve as a roadbed for the dinkey train that hauled clay from Wynn's mine to the local brick plant. It had been closed and fenced off for many years with only a path for pedestrians. In the 1930's it was widened and graded by Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) members of the Salt Lick camp beyond Monument.

Many of the early histories of Central Pennsylvania areas mention David Lewis, who was a notorious, although a Robin Hood type, robber. It is not known if Lewis, who was aided by his partner, Connelly, committed any of his acts within our area. However, it is known that he was a son of Lewis Lewis, a highly regarded surveyor, who had worked here with Charles Lukens as early as 1775. After the death of Lewis Lewis his widow, Jane (Dill) Lewis, became the second wife of Frederick Leathers, the great, great, great, great grandfather of the authors of this story. Following Frederick's death in the Mt. Eagle area in 1796, his will (Mifflin County Will Book I, p. 105) was contested by his seven children. Jane was accused of tampering. After eluding many a posse David Lewis and Connelly were finally captured amidst gunfire near Sinnemahoning in late June, 1820. While being transported to Bellefonte Connelly, who had been critically wounded, died at Great Island (Lock Haven), and was buried there. Lewis, who refused amputation of a badly wounded arm, died of gangrene in the Bellefonte jail several weeks later, and was buried at Milesburg. The many stories regarding Lewis usually noted that his brothers and sisters were highly respected citizens of Centre County. The Lower Paxton Township bicentennial book of 1967 lists some of the activities of Lewis in Dauphin County, and stresses that he robbed the rich and divided his plunder with the poor. Later in 1820 Lewis was posthumously pardoned of his crimes by Governor Findlay.

Late in 1980 J. Filmore Miller, who, with his wife Catherine, lives east of town at the crest of Bickel's Hill, received some deserving publicity. Mr. Miller, a retiree of the local Armstrong plant and more recently an employee of Spotts store, makes wooden toys for free distribution to needy children at Christmas time. Working through the Salvation Army "Fil" is always assured that each toy reaches a very appreciative youngster.

Q Who was the first woman to run for president of the United States?

A Victoria Clafin Woodhull was nominated for the presidency by the National Woman's Suffrage Association in 1872. Her platform supported free love, abolition of the death penalty, excess-profits taxes, better public housing, birth control and easier divorce laws. The first woman member of the House of Representatives, Jeanette Rankin of Wyoming, was elected in 1916, four years before the enactment of nationwide women's suffrage. In 1932, Hattie Caraway of Arkansas became the first woman elected to the Senate, though 10 years earlier a woman, Rebecca Latimer Felton of Georgia, had been appointed a senator.

The authors take this opportunity to thank all those persons who provided pictures and material for this book. The efforts of Joseph M. DeHaas in this regard were especially gratifying. Tribute is paid to the late Mae (McCarthy) Miller for the memories she shared in her latter years.
